

Digitized by the Internet Archive in 2022 with funding from Kahle/Austin Foundation

G. M. ELLIOTT LIBRARY
CINCINNATI BIBLE SEMINARY
2700 GLENWAY AVE.
P. O. BOX 04320
CINCINNATI, OHIO 45204-3200

CHURCH POLITY

A PRACTICAL TREATISE ON

THE ORGANIZATION AND REGULATION OF THE KINGDOM OF GOD ON EARTH

AS SET FORTH IN THE NEW TESTAMENT

GEORGE MARK ELLIOTT LIBRARY
The Cincinnati Bible Seminary

By W. L. HAYDEN, A. M.

CHICAGO

S. J. CLARKE

1894

Reproduced and Issued by the
OLD PATHS BOOK CLUB
5646 ROCKHILL ROAD
KANSAS CITY 4, MISSOURI

262

H415C

12464

INDEX.

	PAGE.
PREFACE.....	7
CHAPTER I—PRELIMINARY SURVEY.....	9
“ II—THE APOSTOLIC OFFICE.....	19
“ III—THE EVANGELISTIC OFFICE.....	35
“ IV—THE PASTORAL OFFICE.....	48
“ V—THE DEACON'S OFFICE.....	65
“ VI—WOMAN'S WORK.....	71
“ VII—THE RULE OF DISCIPLINE.....	92
“ VIII—CHURCH DISCIPLINE.....	102
“ IX—THE RIGHTS OF THE CONGREGATION.....	131
APPENDIX.....	R. MILLIGAN
APPENDIX.....	DAVID LIPSCOMB

PREFACE TO THIS EDITION

The Editor of the Old Paths Book Club is happy to make selection of the material contained in this book from the pen of William Hayden on "Church Polity." Nothing quite so pungent, cogent and plain has been gathered into one volume anywhere in the literature of the Restoration Movement. However, there are some features, of a minor nature, which do not contribute to the work at all, but are, so to speak, the defects of the work. These minor points would but serve to raise questions and doubts, and this Editor has taken the liberty to edit out some little phrases here and there because he too has a responsibility to the truth in the works he passes on to an ever-widening circle.

Brother Hayden seems to have had an idea about a local preacher's being always an elder among his fellow elders in a congregation, and perhaps also occupying oftentimes the chair in business sessions. Others may agree with him. Some will not. That a preacher may also be an elder or pastor from the scriptural standpoint there can scarcely be any doubt, but this Editor takes the position that he need not be, though he may be. Hence the slight editing which is done in this volume.

The material on appeals in church trials in the original volume of "Church Polity" represented the deductions made from established thoughts on the part of the author, and would not be uniformly concurred in. In fact, there would be some distinct disagreement, and so in this edition those features that do not add to the real study of church government, but contain the seeds of doubt, have been deliberately left off because the Old Paths Book Club would not circulate them under its imprimatur and aegis.

Appendices from Dr. Robert Milligan and David Liscomb have been placed in this volume, because of their able thinking on the subject of "Church Polity." At some points they have not agreed, but they are allowed to speak without prejudice to the issue.

John Allen Hudson, Editor.

PREFACE.

Though "of making of books there is no end, and much study is a weariness of the flesh," while man's personal and social needs create the demand, books will be made, and the flesh cannot grow weary in a worthier effort than that which supplies such demand. As material progress awakens inventive genius to apply natural forces to practical purposes, so spiritual progress stimulates the rational powers to use moral forces with wise economy and the greatest effect.

The following pages contain the results of reading, reflecting, writing and experience that run through more than thirty years of public life. At the earnest solicitation of many persons of different religious bodies, they are put into permanent form, in the hope that a wider circulation may increase their usefulness, and coming generations may gather fruit from these years of toil.

The author claims some special fitness for his task, but wishes his work to stand exclusively on its merits as a scriptural presentation of a timely topic of much practical, if not vital, importance.

The aim has been to be accurate in thought, clear in statement, and comprehensive in treatment of the subject in hand, without tediousness in detail or attempt at exhaustiveness of materials in reach. There is no pretense of originality in ideas, or language in which they are expressed. Sometimes authorities are cited and their language is copied without specific credit being given or usual quotation marks being used, that the manifestation of the truth may commend itself to every man's conscience in the sight of God without prejudice.

But the author here gratefully acknowledges his indebted-edness to the publications of A. Campbell, R. Milligan, B. C. Deweese, and others whose books and essays have been read with pleasure and profit.

PREFACE.

Especial recognition of valuable assistance is due to M. P. Hayden, who has been deeply interested in the work from its beginning, and who is the author of the chapters on Church Discipline and Woman's Work.

This work is in no sense a creed nor a book of discipline for any religious body. While the author knows no reason in scripture or common sense against the adoption of forms in the administration of church government, this treatise on Church Polity was not written with any expectation of adoption for such purpose, and, if it were, it could not be fairly regarded as a form of discipline until it is adopted by congregations affiliated in a general body. It is given to the public in the hope that it will meet a felt want and do good in the better ordering of the churches of Christ according to the teachings of the New Testament of our Lord Jesus Christ, in correcting irregularities that have hurt the cause of righteousness and impaired the usefulness of congregations, and in helping to unify the movements of the mighty army of the redeemed marching under the Captain of our salvation to the conquest of the world and the bringing of many sons to glory.

CHURCH POLITY.

CHAPTER I.

PRELIMINARY SURVEY.

The trend of religious thought toward the reunion of Christendom on a thoroughly scriptural basis brings into prominence all questions that have relation to this end.

Subjects that have been considered from peculiarly denominational standpoints, and that present barriers to Christian unity, demand reconsideration in the light of advanced intelligence, with a view to satisfactory adjustment.

As in observing the motions of the planets from the earth, confusion and retrogression in movement are sometimes apparent because of the moving earth and its distance from the center of the solar system, which is the true point of observation—so there is seeming conflict in systems that are seen from varying distances from the central orb of truth, that vitalizes and controls the whole sweeping circle of divine revelation. The Christo-concentric view of Christianity is now generally accepted as the true view that harmonizes all parts of the inspired volume, revealing the lesser orbs of truth in right relation to a common center.

The rays of Christian principle radiate from the person of Christ, who gives them power over mind, heart and conscience. All duty may be traced in direct line to Jesus. Methods are incidental and subject to modification by consecrated wisdom and varying social conditions and environments.

Any method stamped with divine approval must always be regarded as the best. In the absence of such approval, the most effective way to accomplish a required duty should be sought, and, when found, adopted. Where Christ has left men free, they should stand fast in their liberty, only using it not for an occasion of strife and division, but by love serving one another. (Gal. v:15.) The initial point of investigation is clear-cut definition. This is the more important when the line of inquiry leads directly into conflicting theories, over petrified usages, through mountains of prejudice, and across marshes of ignorance.

In strictness, there is no church government, since the church has no legislative authority, and no right to enforce its own will upon Christ's freemen. Judicial authority, within certain limits, and executive power are given to chosen representatives of the body of Christ to apply the law of His kingdom and to enforce the will of the King throughout His earthly realm.

Church polity rests upon the authority of Christ, and is the application of His law in the organization and regulation of His kingdom among men. Its form is monarchical. To accept Hooker's dictum: "It is not possible that any form of polity, much less polity ecclesiastical, should be good unless God Himself be the author of it."

Blackstone says: "All authority among men is either usurped or derived." Usurpation leads to tyranny. It is always dangerous to human rights, and especially so in the church, which should be the conservator of highest freedom. Soul-liberty consists in the absence of all restraint, except as God binds it with moral and religious obligation.

Rightful authority is derived from the only source of all authority, through lawful channel. Without such provision for its communication, just government cannot exist.

Public law is a rule of conduct prescribed by the supreme authority. But no law executes itself. What are called laws of nature are the generalizations of the Creator's uniform mode of action in the physical universe. There must be intelligence clothed with executive power in order to have efficiency in maintaining social order.

In the Christian institution there is but one King, Lord and Lawgiver—Jesus the Messiah. "He is the maker and monarch of all.' He alone reigns over His church. He is invested with all authority in heaven and on earth. His government on earth is not in person or by proxy. He wears a crown in heaven, and His kingdom, in its true, divine and ancient character, throws its arms around every one in every place that calls upon the name of the Lord out of a pure heart and holds him directly responsible to the Head and Monarch of all. Though a spiritual kingdom, not of this world, it is not a mob, nor a fierce, lawless democracy, led by every aspirant and demagogue who has some by-ends and selfish impulses urging him forward in the career of personal honor, fortune or aggrandizement. The sovereign Lord and exalted King has need of laws, officers and organization through which to send forth His sanctifying spirit and power into this world. A book is not sufficient to govern the church. No book ever governed any community—not even the book of the law, or the book of the Gospel; else Moses would have resigned when he wrote the law, and would never have laid his hands upon Joshua; else Jesus would never have sent out apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors and teachers of the New Testament, when He had been crowned King, and sovereign executive His will. After the New Testament had been written, Paul would not have commanded Timothy or Titus to reprove, to rebuke, or to commit to faithful and competent persons the office of instructing and building up the church. Nor would he have commanded the community to know them that were over them in the Lord, and who admonished them, and to esteem them very highly in love for the sake of their work, i. e., their office, and to submit themselves, and to obey them as those who watched for their souls.

There are two principles of ecclesiastical organization that result in systems that are of elementary and essentially diverse attributes and tendencies. These are absolutism and individualism: the one is based upon dogmatic authority, and tends to concentration and tyranny; the other repudiates all authority in religion, and tends to disruption, anarchy and ruin. A spiritual despotism is the direct tendency of the one, and an uncontrollable spiritual libertinism and licentious liberalism is the certain onward progress of the other. In the first ages of Christianity, the authority system issued in absolute Popery from accumulated abuses and corruptions; in later times the no-authority system uniformly terminates in the dissolution of society, and finds its quietus in pure pharisaical independency, in which organization and discipline are greatly defective, and which is, therefore, essentially inadequate to the present condition and wants of society.

Whenever individuals unite for any purpose whatever, commercial, industrial, political, social, educational, benevolent or religious, there must be some kind of organization and government. There must be some basis of operation and co-operation, official superintendency and administration, and co-operation in execution, in order to the accomplishment of the object sought. Those who associate together for the promotion of a common interest must be organized into one body, with a head to plan and direct, and with hands and feet to execute or carry on the work to be done. No society can permanently exist without government; some persons must be placed in authority to guide and control, and the rest must submit to their authority, follow their guidance, and work under their direction. So that where there is society there must be government; where there is government there must be law; where there is law there must be penalty for its violation; when the law is violated and the penalty incurred, the law must be enforced and the penalty inflicted; otherwise the law cannot be enforced, the government cannot be maintained, and society cannot be preserved and protected. These are fundamental and well-established principles of government, and constitute the basis of all forms of government, parental, political, scholastical and ecclesiastical. They are true, also, of all organized industries and co-operative enterprises among men, as mills, factories, railroads and moral and benevolent societies. In all these, there must be organization, government, administration, co-operation.

Jesus Christ has established a kingdom upon earth. This kingdom is also called a church, an ecclesia. This ecclesia consists of persons called out from the world to be disciples or subjects of Christ. For mutual helpfulness, and for the spread of the Gospel at home and abroad, it is necessary for Christ's followers to unite together in some organization and under some form of government. What shall this organization be? What shall be the form of government for Christians? Has the Lord Jesus Christ established a system of organization and government, or are Christians at liberty to make their own arrangements and adopt their own form of government? What saith the scriptures?

The scriptures clearly establish the following propositions:

(1.) Jesus Christ is King of His kingdom and Head of His church. All authority in heaven and on earth has been given to Him. He is Lord and Christ, the blessed and only Potentate, the King of kings, and Lord of lords; He is the Head of the church, which is His body; He is the Chief, the great Shepherd and Bishop of the souls of His followers.

(2.) Jesus Christ has established laws for the government of His kingdom or church. He is our Prophet or Law-giver; we are commanded to hear Him; we are under law to Christ, and it is our duty to observe whatever He has commanded.

(3.) Jesus Christ has appointed officers for the regulation and administration of the affairs and interests of His church or kingdom. "And God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondly prophets, thirdly teachers, then miracles, then gifts of healings, helps, governments, divers kinds of tongues." "And he gave some to be apostles; and some prophets; and some evangelists; and some pastors and teachers." Comparing these two passages, we have the following order: 1st, apostles; 2d, prophets; 3d, evangelists; 4th, pastors and teachers. Hence, under Christ, the apostles stand first among the officers of His kingdom.

(4.) The apostles are Christ's representatives or ambassadors, chosen, instructed, sent forth by Him, and inspired by the Holy Spirit to represent Christ's authority upon earth, and establish His kingdom in the world.

Thus the apostles of Christ, as His master builders or architects, established the foundation of Christ's church or kingdom, and others are to build upon this foundation according to their instructions.

(5.) The system of church organization and administration established by the apostles of Christ for the government and regulation of Christ's disciples is binding on the church to the end of time. Where the apostles bind us, we are bound to observe their directions; where they have left us free, we are free to make our own arrangements according to the law of expediency. (Matt. xxviii:18, 20; I Tim. vi:15; Eph. i:20-23; I Peter v:4; I Cor. xii:28; Eph. iv:11; John xv:16; Luke xxii:29, 30; Matt. xviii:18; John xiii:20.)

At first, the entire government of the church was in the apostles, and their personal supervision continued while they lived. They made provision, however, for a continual personal supervision of the affairs of the church after their departure. The government of the church is still under the rule and guidance of the apostles, as their directions are embodied in the teaching of the New Testament, and the affairs of the church are now to be managed in harmony with their instructions.

The commission of Jesus to His apostles is the vital nexus between the crowned Head on high and His body on earth.

From it came the established church and the completed revelation of Christ; the inspired record of the life, teaching, miracles, atonement, resurrection and coronation of our Lord, and all needful truth into which the chosen apostles were guided by the Holy Spirit. This record is the New Testament, the sole statute book of Christ's kingdom.

The commission presents two phases of Christianity, viz.: the evangelical and the ecclesiastical. The former includes the making of disciples and bringing them into personal and vital union with the divine life in Christ. Preaching is the divinely appointed means of salvation. (I Cor. i:21) The latter embraces everything necessary to the observance of all things commanded by Christ in order to the perfection of His people and the usefulness of His church.

The apostolic college was founded by the Lord Himself, and consisted of men chosen from among His own personal converts, who were sent out into all the world to convert all nations. It furnishes a grand model for the church in all ages in its aggressive and superintending character. This model contains a congregational, a presbyterial and an episcopal element—congregational, in that the congregation, en masse, has a voice in electing its own officers, in receiving and excluding members, and in deciding questions of prudential management; presbyterial, in that the congregation is required to submit to the elders of its own choice, when they are approved as scripturally worthy; and episcopal, in that there is enjoined a care of all the churches by an official superintendence of competent evangelists. It is methodical, but not methodistical, in the wise combination of all those elements which are the essential characteristics of efficient administration under any form of church polity.

Since the Christian Church is not a Christian church, but comprehends all congregations of Christians, contemplated as one great, universal community or kingdom, the co-operation of churches in districts, states and nations is essential to the highest triumphs of the church of God in its grand mission on earth. Competition between denominations should be superseded by co-operation of Christian congregations serving the same Lord, filled with the same spirit, and obeying the law of Christ.

Christians are placed under a Christocracy. The rights of God and rights of man are safely lodged in the hands of our King, who is the peer of the eternal God and the peer of glorified man. His spiritual kingdom is the church. He is head over all things for its sake. He claims only the regenerated, sanctified and redeemed sons of men as His subjects. They are spread over all nations but united to one God, one Lord, one Holy Spirit, one faith, one baptism, one hope, one church. No social system can perpetuate and extend its influence, or make its means and instrumentalities available, without a confederative organization. There is always need for government and discipline in the church of Christ. These are indispensable to good order and usefulness.

Government, in its elementary principles, exists in heaven and earth, in church and state, and in the human mind.

There may be abuses of authority and errors in administration, to which all institutions are liable. But abuse should not annihilate right use, nor vitiate and annul a divine institution, or even a human one that is indispensable to the existence and welfare of any society.

The church in a city, state, an empire, or a world of fallen humanity, must have an organization that has the power of abstracting from the mass of mankind materials to promote its healthful growth as a community. This power consists mainly in such an organization as brings to bear upon that community its whole moral and spiritual force.

Therefore, counsel, conjoint purpose, and concerted action, in their aggregate mass of influence, are the first grand instrumentalities to accomplish this end. This requires statistical knowledge, joint consultation, co-operation by executive boards, stated meetings for deliberation, and special meetings on occasion to meet emergencies.

These are the elements of a polity that conforms itself to the genius of human nature and to all conditions of human society, as developed in the Christian scriptures. The right of suffrage is the foundation of all freedom, both political and religious. Salvation itself is attainable only in virtue of this right. A man votes for or against Christ, as he chooses. No man is compelled to go to heaven or hell. In religion, everything must be voluntary. But when a man confesses Christ as his personal sovereign, he is obligated to obey His laws and to respect the equal rights of Christ's freemen throughout His kingdom. This obligation draws men into local assemblies for worship, service and fellowship.

G. A. Jacobs, D. D., in his admirable work, "The Ecclesiastical Polity of the New Testament," gives a clear survey of the subject in his first chapter. A few paragraphs are here transcribed:

"Jesus Himself commenced His kingdom, and those who attached themselves to Him became its citizens. Jesus Himself made known the great moral principles which were to regulate His subjects.

"But the church was not begun until after the descent of the Holy Spirit upon the apostles on the day of Pentecost, and it was never mentioned, except prospectively, before that time. Men could be admitted into the kingdom of Christ as soon as they were willing to submit to His authority, and to conform to the life which He lived and taught; but they could not be formed into a church until they believed in Him as the Son of God, the Saviour of those who received Him by the justifying righteousness of His life and the atoning sacrifice of His death, and the imparters of the Holy Spirit, and the future judge of man; and this could not be until after His work on earth was done, and He had risen again and ascended into heaven.

“The apostles, therefore, were the founders of the Christian church. They were its divinely appointed and infallible teachers and legislators. They were its supreme authorities on earth to declare its doctrines, and to prescribe its form and polity, to admit into it and exclude from it, to bind and to loose, to remit and to retain sins. They were, in short, to organize the church as a regular society, possessed of a definite character, with its own especial rights, privileges and objects. They were to rule in it as long as they lived, and it rested with them to leave such instructions for its future guidance as they might consider necessary for its continuance and welfare as a permanent institution in the world.

“To qualify them for this high office and important work, the apostles received a divine authority and power from the commission of Christ and the inspiration of the Holy Spirit.

* * * * *

“The church of the apostolic period is the only church in which there is found an authority justly claiming the acknowledgment of Christian bodies in other times. And such authority is found in this church, not because it was possessed of a truer catholicity, or a purer constitution, or a more primitive antiquity than belong to succeeding ages, for neither antiquity, nor purity of form, nor catholicity confers right to govern or command; but because it was under the immediate rule and guidance of the apostles, and it is their infallible judgment alone, as exhibited in this church, which has a legitimate claim to our submission.

“Notwithstanding the still generally acknowledged supremacý of Holy Scripture, the main current of church opinion on all questions of polity and practice, to say nothing of doctrines, has for a very considerable time been setting strongly towards the ecclesiastical system of the third and fourth centuries, to the neglect, in this respect, of the New Testament; and many are carried quietly along with the tide, knowing little or nothing of the shore to which it is wafting them.

“It is very unwise, unapostolic and un-Christian to bind fast what the apostles unbound, and for one church to condemn another for differences of judgment in such questions. The authority to which alone we should appeal is that of the Divine Head of the whole church, as it may be gathered from the words and actions of His inspired apostles. The one safe and legitimate course in all our church reforms is to go to the New Testament as our guide.

“The valuable remark of Richard Hooker is a necessary caution. He says: ‘The superstition that rises voluntarily and by degrees which are hardly discerned, mingling itself with the rites even of every divine service done to the only true God, must be considered as a creeping and encroaching evil, an evil the first beginnings whereof are commonly harmless, so that it proves only then to be an evil when some further accident doth grow unto it, or itself come unto further growth.’

“The essential characteristics of the early Christian community are personal, spiritual liberty in Christ and a social equality in the church. The whole polity of the apostolic times was adapted to these conditions, and grew out of them as a natural organism of the common Christian life.”

A practical treatise on the subject will cover all its bearings on the propagation of the Gospel, the planting of churches, the good order and co-operation of congregations, and the wise combination of evangelical forces in resisting the assaults of all forms of opposition from the enemies of Christ.

The following chapters will treat the several branches of this important theme under appropriate heads.

CHAPTER II.

THE APOSTOLIC OFFICE.

In the historical development of Christianity, the apostleship is next to the life, teaching, miracles, sacrificial atonement, and victorious resurrection of Jesus the Christ.

This is the complement of the ministry among men of our Lord, and is essential to complete that which He began to do and to teach. Jesus instituted the apostolic office with special care, and buttressed it with His own personal choice and education of the men to fill it on the one side, and with the special endowment of the Holy Spirit on the other.

This office is the sole means of bringing the incarnate life and the death of the Son of God into contact with individual minds, hearts and consciences from the day of His ascension down to the remotest ages, even to the end of time.

Through Jesus in person, those chosen for this office "received grace and apostleship for the obedience of faith among all nations for his name." (Rom. i:5, xvi:26.)

These persons thus chosen and specially endowed were ambassadors for Christ, to whom was given the ministry of reconciliation. (II Cor. v:18, 20.)

They were invested with plenary authority to transact business in this world for the King in the heavens, in the inauguration of His kingdom on earth and the establishment of it, so that it might be an everlasting kingdom, break in pieces and consume all other kingdoms, and by peaceful conquest work its way to universal dominion.

From its nature and position, this office is extraordinary, of highest rank and dignity, giving authority and unity to the appointments of Christ's kingdom on earth. A clear conception of it lies at the foundation of a correct understanding of the Gospel, the church and its polity.

The first inquiry is as to the persons of the apostleship. Who are eligible to the apostolic office ?

The word "apostle" means one sent, a missionary. It is used in the scriptures in speaking of Christ sent by His Father, of those sent by Jesus, and of those sent by the church. (Heb. iii:1; Matt. x:2; Acts xiv:4, 14; Phil. ii:25.) But when applied to the apostolic office, it is limited to those sent by Christ in person, and during His life included only twelve disciples. The names of the twelve apostles are mentioned in four lists. (Matt. x:2-4; Mark iii:13-19; Luke vi:13-16; Acts i:13.)

One of these by transgression fell, and another was chosen "to take part of this ministry and apostleship" from which Judas fell, and was numbered with the eleven. He was Spirit-filled and acted with the eleven on the day of Pentecost, thus keeping the original number full. (Acts i:26 and ii:14.)

Later, Paul was chosen by a personal appearance of Jesus, and became in a peculiar sense the apostle of the Gentiles. (Acts ix:15, xxvi:16-18; Rom. xi:13.)

These thirteen men are all that Jesus chose and put into the apostolic office.

Conybeare and Howson truly say: "They were appointed by Christ Himself with absolute power to govern His church; to them He had given the keys of the kingdom of heaven with authority to admit or to exclude; they were also guided by His perpetual inspiration, so that all their moral and religious teaching was absolutely and infallibly true; they were empowered by their solemn denunciations of evil and their inspired judgments on all moral questions to bind and to loose, to remit and to retain, the sins of men. This was the essential peculiarity of their office, which can find no parallel in the after history of the church. But, so far as their function was to govern, they represented the monarchical element in the constitution of the early church, and their power was a full counterpoise to that democratic tendency which has sometimes been attributed to the ecclesiastical arrangements of the apostolic period." ("Life and Epistles of Paul," chapter xiii.) They had no official successors. From the nature of their duties there could be no succession. First of all, they were witnesses to Christ. In order to be witnesses, they must have personal knowledge of the things concerning which they bear testimony. They must have seen the Lord, heard Him, handled Him, been instructed and commissioned by Him; particularly, they must have seen Him after He was known to be dead, that they might be witnesses of His resurrection. (Acts i and ii.) Secondly, they must be so fully under the supervision and control of the Holy Spirit as to guard them against mistake in remembering what the Great Teacher said to them, in giving utterance to His teaching, in expressing other truth into which they were guided by the Spirit, and in confirming their claim to spiritual endowment in signs and wonders and mighty deeds. These were the signs of an apostle. (John xiv:26, xv:26, xvi:13, 14; II Cor. xii:12)

Without these qualifications of having companied with the immediate associates of Jesus, and of Spirit-endowment manifested in unmistakable miracles, no man could be an apostle of Christ. The assumption of apostolic authority without apostolic illumination and power is a shadow without a substance,—a form of godliness without the power thereof. This is the germ of the most dangerous ecclesiasticism and the most intolerable tyranny that has ever afflicted the church of the living God.

The commission of Christ to His apostles defines the scope of their office. It is the letter of instruction from the King to His ambassadors. It comes from Him who is clothed with all authority in heaven and upon earth. It commits to these apostles all the interests of the kingdom of heaven on earth. When endued with power from on high, they were to make disciples of the nations, introduce them into the kingdom of God's dear Son, and teach them to observe all things commanded by Him. All this involved the full proclamation of the Gospel, the announcement of the law of pardon as Heaven's ultimatum to a rebellious world, the institution of ordinances for the observance of Christ's disciples, and the giving of all needful laws for the government of the church through all the ages, and the extension of the kingdom of God into all the world.

Whatever was said and done by those apostles within their instructions bound men on earth and Christ in heaven. If they had transcended their commission, their utterances and acts to that extent would have no legal force anywhere. They acted clearly within their commission, which is the legal basis of the universal church of Christ and the most important document on the records of time.

Any man who tampers with that commission, deviates from its specified terms of salvation, or despises its authority, takes a fearful responsibility, presumptuously touches the ark of the covenant, weakens the foundation of the world's hope, forfeits all just claims as a true minister of Christ, and becomes a mere peddler of theological wares, without license from the government under which he assumes to live.

The apostles had the sole responsibility of the execution of the will of the Son of God in founding, organizing and fully equipping the church of Christ on earth for the fulfillment of its heaven-born mission, until Jesus comes again, without sin-offering, to take His ransomed people home. This was done by these ambassadors of Christ and needed no repetition.

The assumption of apostolic succession in office is the basis of Roman, Grecian and Anglican episcopacy. This question reaches granite-rock of church organization. It is the point of widest divergence in church polity, and demands careful examination in this connection.

The high claim of the Church of Rome is thus stated by herself: "Christ organized His church on earth as it was to endure unto the end of time, instructing His apostles in the order in which He had constituted them, with St. Peter as their head, to teach all nations unto the end of time. Just as in any society all of authority and prerogative essential to the office pass from him who first holds the reins of government to his legitimate successor as head of that society, so, too, the words addressed by our Lord investing St. Peter with supreme authority over the entire church were addressed to St. Peter, not only as personally regarded, but also as representing in his person the entire series of his legitimate successors in this office and dignity down to the end of time."

The main issue here turns on the crucial passage in Matt. xvi:18, 19.

The immense superstructure of the papal hierarchy is reared upon this assumed supremacy of Peter, and the further assumption of legitimate successors in office. The words of our Lord in the conversation at Cæsarea Philippi say nothing of succession in office, and give no warrant for the inference on which Rome rests.

First, we raise the question of fact: Did Christ, in the foundation of His church, confer upon any single individual supreme authority over the entire church in all things essential to the salvation of men (the end for which the church was instituted), and make constitutional provision for this official succession?

If so, it is the duty of all true followers of Christ to subject themselves to this supreme head and render obedience. But if not so, the Church of Rome is built on a strong delusion and a stupendous assumption. The same is true of the historic episcopate in other ecclesiastical establishments.

The visible primacy of the church is claimed for no other among the apostles than Simon Peter, the son of Jonas. It is certain that the words of Jesus to Simon in this famous passage do not declare, either explicitly or implicitly, the authoritative, infallible headship of Peter over the entire church of Christ, since these words are not in the passage, and the ideas they represent are not necessarily implied.

Prominence is not pre-eminence; precedence is not presidency; primacy is not equivalent to supremacy. Prominence in the apostolic college, precedence of the name of Peter, and his primacy in the divine arrangement for an orderly and authoritative inauguration of the kingdom of Christ, do not establish the pre-eminence, the presidency, or the supremacy of Simon Peter over his fellow-apostles or the entire church of Christ on earth. This crucial passage is bed-rock on this great question, and the mighty battle between Romanism and Protestantism must be fought over "this rock." Here, too, we must discover the power of the keys.

Our Lord uses the figurative language of the East. In one verse (Matt. xvi:18) the church is likened to a building about to be built. In the next verse (19) it is likened to a kingdom about to be established. The building must stand on a sure foundation; hence "on this rock I will build my church," said Christ. The kingdom must be opened by some one on earth.

What then is fairly and necessarily implied in the declaration of Christ to Peter: "I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of Heaven?" Whatever is not in these words by necessary implication relating to the question in hand, is not there at all. A key is a symbol of authority. The plural "keys" is a symbol of full authority to open or to shut that to which they belong. The language of Christ does fairly imply that Peter was the one of the apostles who should open the Kingdom of Heaven to men. This was, however, the divine order in the inauguration of the new reign of the Messiah. It gave primacy to Peter, but not supremacy. For the power to bind and loose was given to the other apostles also. (Matt. xviii:18.) Peter received the same commission as the other eleven and no other. Peter stood up with the eleven on the feast of Pentecost, when it is conceded the Kingdom of Heaven was opened and three thousand souls entered into it. The fact that the eleven, equally endowed with the Holy Spirit, stood up with Peter and silently acquiesced in his utterances shows their recognition of the primacy of Peter as spokesman, but disproves his supremacy as head of the church. Because of his primacy, Peter is sent for to open "the door of faith to the Gentiles."

The power of the keys was the authority to open the kingdom by an authoritative promulgation of the law of pardon under the administration of King Jesus, as expressly contained in the commission of Christ to all His apostles. Neither Peter, nor any other apostle, nor all the apostles, and much less uninspired men, ever received authority to modify the terms of Christ's commission. Peter used the keys given to him and did not make new ones. The question of supremacy among the apostles was once presented to Christ, and He positively forbade it. He said: "Ye know that the princes of the Gentiles exercise dominion over them, and they that are great exercise authority upon them; but it shall not be so among you." (Matt. xx:25, 26.) Peter never exercised authority over the other apostles. He always acted with them. He sat in the council at Jerusalem under the presidency of James, and participated in the discussions on the same footing with Paul and Barnabas. Paul includes all the apostles in his foundation of the church. (Eph. ii:20.) Peter receives censure from Paul for his dissimulation, which is repugnant to the assumption of his supreme headship or of his infallibility. This power of the keys, therefore, does not imply the "authoritative, infallible headship of Peter over the entire church of Christ."

When Simon, son of Jonas, was brought before Jesus, He said, "Thou shalt be called Cephas, which is interpreted a stone." At Cæsarea Philippi, Jesus fulfilled his promise and called Simon, son of Jonas, Petros, "a stone." The significance of this name as applied to the person of Simon is to be found in the fact that he was to receive "the keys." But we have clearly shown that the power of the keys does not imply supremacy, but only primacy. Hence Simon is not "this rock" upon which the church is built. Every Greek scholar knows that Jesus said "upon this petra I will build my church." Petros is a single stone, a piece of rock. Petra is rock, masses of living rock. Liddell and Scott, in their lexicon, say: "There is no example in good authors of petra in the signification of petros for a stone." Without violence to the language, Christ could not have used petra to refer to Petros, the person of Simon, son of Jonas, when He declared, "upon this rock I will build my church." He could have referred to nothing else but Himself, as presented in the confession made by Peter as the representative apostle. Peter himself so understood it, and hence applies the prophecy of Isaiah xxviii:16 concerning "the sure foundation" to Jesus Christ, "to whom coming as to a living stone," an unbroken rock. Paul declares that "other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ." The apostles were as single stones in the foundation of the holy temple in the Lord, because they were next to our Lord and received inspiration directly from Christ, which enabled them to speak with authority in the church. In this sense inspired men were on an equality. Jesus the Christ, the son of the living God, whom the Father in heaven revealed to Peter and others at His baptism, and not Peter, is this rock-foundation of the church. He alone, "God incarnate," can meet the necessities of "the one holy Catholic apostolic church," and is the supreme Head. Peter is therefore not presented as the rock upon which "the sacred structure of the church is to be built by the work of the divine Architect's hands," as Rome assumes, but has never proven.

Who, then, sustains the characteristic relations to the entire church of Christ on earth of a foundation to a building? Supreme authority is the foundation rock of every social edifice. This is the fundamental primary element of every society. This is the principle that gives lasting stability to every community. This is the cause of all social unity, and this the principle to which all members and the society must be subject, and from which if any are separated they forthwith cease to be enrolled among the members. This authority, too, must be universal and supreme. Whoever possesses "supreme authority and jurisdiction over the entire church, and over every portion and member of it," is the rock, and sustains all the characteristic relations to the whole church that a foundation sustains to the superstructure.

Jesus said just before He went to His Father, "All authority is given unto me in heaven and in earth." (Matt. xxviii:18.) The God of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of glory * * * "raised him from the dead and set him at his own right hand in the heavenly places, far above all principality, and power, and might, and dominion, and every name that is named, not only in this world, but also in that which is to come: and hath put all things under his feet, and gave him to be the head over all things to the church, which is his body, the fulness of him that filleth all in all." (Eph. i:20-23.) Since Christ possessed supreme and universal authority and never transferred it to Peter, but still retained it after giving His commission to His apostles, and to Peter only as one of the twelve, Christ Himself, and not Peter, is the foundation-rock of supreme authority and universal dominion over the church. Thus, as the word of God declares in the most simple and in the clearest terms the supreme headship of Christ over His body, the church, we prove Him to be the rock-foundation upon which His church is built. The Romanist reverses this, the proper procedure, and assumes—without a single declaration of scripture, either explicitly or implicitly, to warrant it, and contrary to the plainest rules of Greek grammar and usage, that will not allow petra “rock,” to be used for Petros, “Peter”—that Simon, son of Jonas, is the rock-foundation, and proceeds to infer his supreme and infallible headship over the universal church. He knows that frail, mortal Simon could not fill these characteristic relations to the entire church. Hence he assumes, without a word of proof, that he is peculiarly assisted by the perpetual presence of our blessed Lord and immediate guidance of the Holy Ghost. He knows that Peter would and did soon die, and then the church would be headless and foundationless. Hence he invents the fiction of a succession in this supreme office.

The argument to prove the infallible headship of Peter all goes for nothing without the dogma of official succession. It perpetrates the bald fallacy of taking for granted in its conclusion what is not in the premises, either in terms or by necessary implication. But God incarnate, whom Protestants hold as the sure foundation of His own spiritual house, the exalted and universal head of the church of the living God, purchased with His own blood, is the same yesterday, to-day and forever. He holds the reins of government in His own hands. He could have no successor and needs none, and hence makes no allusion to succession in His declared purpose to build His church. The Protestant position is superior to that of the Romanist as Christ is above Peter, as the heavens are higher than the earth.

The Romanist emphasizes the important truth that “the fundamental, primary element of every society is supreme authority.” When pressed to the wall on the question of supreme headship of the church, he concedes that Christ is "the primary rock, the rock of ages, the ever-living rock." It is claimed that "by the very name of Peter," he is "the secondary rock." Then there are two rocks, the primary and the secondary. This secondary rock is called Petros; the primary is called Petra. So when our Lord said to Simon: "Thou art Petros," or Kepha, He did not invest him with supreme authority, but with authority in a secondary sense. He "communicates to him a temporal participation in His own Divine authority, in the government of His kingdom on earth." This is the truth well stated, and, to quote again, "the words addressed by our Lord, investing St. Peter with 'secondary' authority over the entire church, were addressed to St. Peter, not only as personally regarded, but also as representing in his person—" what? Here is a fundamental difference. Both parties admit this representative character in which Simon was addressed, but differ as to what he represents. The Catholic says, "the entire series of his legitimate successors in this office and dignity to the end of time." The Protestant says, "the entire circle of apostles and prophets." Paul decides the question against the former and for the latter. "Ye are built upon the foundation of apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner-stone."

The authority communicated to the apostles was limited by the explicit instructions in their commission, still exists in the church, and will continue to exist in it to the end of time, embodied in the inspired record of their acts and teachings.

If it were the will of the ever-living Christ that the authority communicated to Peter and those united with him in the apostolic college should be continued to legitimate successors, He would have so declared in plainest terms, and would have provided specifically for the succession, so that it might be legally handed down the ages. He never so declared in any terms, and made no provision for it whatever. It is not enough to expose the fallacies of the papal interpretation of this declaration of our Lord concerning the foundation of His church—its true meaning should be brought out.

For this purpose it is only necessary for the intelligent reader to exercise his right of private judgment, which has been fully vindicated by the reformation of the sixteenth century. But this is not the right of an individual to make definitions to suit a purpose, nor to disregard the accepted principles of the language in which he is studying the Bible, nor to add to or take from what is written by inspiration. Private judgment is the inalienable right of every human being who must give account to God to understand the revelation of God to men for himself. It is also his duty to search the scriptures with the candid use of his faculties, in the light of standard lexicons, acknowledged rules of grammar, the contextual circumstances and contemporary history. This right is cheerfully accorded to every one, while protesting against the groundless assumptions, interpolations, post-apostolic innovations and ecclesiastical traditions of the great apostasy.

Protestantism demands the right of an open field in which to expose error and to vindicate the truth, and thus to obey the apostolic injunction to "contend earnestly for the faith once for all delivered to the saints."

The following exposition of this important conversation is submitted with firmest confidence in its correctness. As introductory to this task will the reader turn to Matt. xvi:13-20 and carefully read the entire paragraph. What is the meaning of this paragraph, as a whole, that naturally comes to an unbiased reader? It is a conversation that occurred between Jesus and His disciples at Cæsarea Philippi. Jesus asks them, "Whom do men say that I, the son of man, am?" They give the common reports concerning Him, which are not satisfactory to Him. He then says to them, the twelve disciples, "But whom say ye that I am?" All are addressed, and the question assumes that all may or ought to be able to answer it. Simon Peter, owing perhaps to a strongly impulsive nature, is the first to speak. He answered and said: "Thou art the Christ, the son of the living God." He thus voices the common faith of all His disciples (John vi:67-69), and no other response was necessary, and hence no other is recorded.

Jesus promptly sets the stamp of His approval upon the two-fold confession of faith which declares Christ's official relation to man and His personal relation to the living God by pronouncing a blessing upon Simon. "Blessed art thou Simon, son of Jonas, for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in Heaven." When and how did the Father reveal this to Simon?

The inspired record states two facts that finally and definitely settle the point:

(1.) "And Jesus, when he was baptized, went up straightway out of the water: and lo, the heavens were opened unto him, and he saw the Spirit of God descending like a dove, and lighting on him: and lo, a voice from heaven, saying, 'This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased.' " (Matt. iii:16, 17.)

(2.) Peter said: "Wherefore of these men which have companied with us all the time that the Lord Jesus went in and out among us, beginning from the baptism of John unto that same day that he was taken up from us, must one be ordained to be a witness with us of his resurrection." (Acts i:21, 22.)

Peter then understood that no man could be a successor of an apostle who had not companied with the disciples of the Lord Jesus from His baptism by John. Hence the other disciples saw the baptism of Jesus, heard the voice of the Father in Heaven, and received the revelation of the truth confessed by Peter at the same time and in the same way that it was revealed to Simon.

Peter alone was pronounced blessed because he formulated this good confession in response to the inquiry of his Lord. Now is all this to be lost sight of and dropped out of thought in the further conversation, as the papal theory implies? The question Christ propounded to His disciples was designed to elicit the very response which Peter gave. Peter was destined from the day he was brought to Jesus to have a prominent place and exalted honor in the founding of the church. As he represented the faith of all the apostles in his confession of Christ, so he was to be the personal representative of apostolic authority on the great opening day of the Kingdom of Heaven on earth.

The honor is conferred upon him when Jesus said to Simon, "Thou art Peter," and immediately Jesus laid the creed-basis of the society of His followers, saying, "Upon this rock I will build my church," the pronominal adjective referring directly to the fundamental truth of Christianity just expressed by Peter, and thus preserving the line of thought throughout the entire interview—closing with a charge not to proclaim that Jesus was the Christ.

A Catholic priest and a Christian preacher discuss this primary element of every society. The preacher says: "What is the foundation-rock upon which every social edifice must be based?" The priest answers: "Supreme authority is the foundation-rock of every social edifice." The preacher says to him: "Happy art thou, the priest, for thou art learned and hast promptly confessed the truth! And I say also unto thee, thou art a confessor and upon this confession I will build my argument." Who would imagine that the words "this confession" refer to anything else than the truth confessed by the priest? It could never occur to an unbiased reader that this confession means the person of the confessor himself.

A true conception of the fundamental importance of Peter's confession of Christ as the sole creed-basis of the church compels the view that this rock is Christ. The whole trend of Protestant thought upon the creed question to-day is in the direction of that two-fold confession as the faith that saves. It is the central truth of the revelation of God. Isaiah prophecies of the sure foundation. (Is. xxviii:16.) Peter applies this prediction to Christ Himself. (I Peter ii:6.) He preached that Jesus is both Lord and Christ, and whosoever believeth on Him shall receive remission of sins. John wrote his gospel that men may believe what Peter confessed. (John xx:30, 31.) He also said, "This is the faith that overcomes the world." (I John v:4, 5.)

Paul testified in Corinth that Jesus is the Christ (Acts xviii:5), and thus laid the foundation of the church there, and declared that other foundation can no man lay. (I Cor. iii:10, 11.) He said to the jailor in Philippi, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved and thy house. (Acts xvi:31.) He wrote "to all that be in Rome," "that if thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus and believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved." (Rom. x:9.)

Paul says explicitly of that spiritual rock, "That rock is Christ;" also, "He is the head of the body, the church," and in all things He has the pre-eminence.

The body of Christ is not a monstrosity with two heads, one invisible in heaven and the other visible to a few in the Vatican.

These testimonies of inspired apostles, in simplest and clearest words, present their conception of the foundation on which believers rest, and of the meaning of our Lord when He said, in the hearing of His disciples: "Upon this rock I will build my church."

Jesus, the Christ, the Son of God, and He only, sustains all the essential characteristic relations to the universal church of a foundation to the super-structure built upon it. He is the primary part of the edifice; gives lasting stability to it; makes and keeps all one who build on Him alone, and on Him every living stone in His spiritual house rests by a personal faith. The whole system of Christianity is founded upon the Christ of God, and this is the natural interpretation of the entire conversation of our Lord with His disciples at Cæsarea Philippi. The scope of the context excludes any other view.

When Christian believers repudiate all other authoritative creeds, and submit divers intellects and wills to the authoritative voice and the guiding hand of the Son of God, there will be a complete restoration of the original unity of the church. Faithful men, who continue in the things which they have learned and have been assured of, knowing that they have learned them of the only Spirit-endowed apostles of Christ, will be thoroughly furnished unto all good works so long as the church is to endure. Thus by the institution of our Lord the building has one and the same sure foundation through the centuries, the "Rock of Ages Cleft for Me." He has prevailed over the gates of Hades, and defies all assaults of Satan and impious men. The wavering minds of tempted disciples may receive divine encouragement, and their souls be confirmed by the enduring word of God through faith. The spiritual kingdom diffused throughout the earth will have the uniting power of consolidated authority of "the blessed and only Potentate, the King of kings and Lord of lords." The sheep will enjoy all needed watchful care and wholesome pastures, while the lambs may hear the friendly voice, be followed by the faithful search, and folded in the affectionate embrace of duly qualified and divinely-appointed under-shepherds, until He whom Peter himself calls "the Shepherd and Bishop of your souls," "the Chief Shepherd," shall appear, when all, pastors and flock, "shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away."

The Lord's prime ministers were properly called apostles. They were educated, trained and commissioned by Himself in person. They had seven points peculiarly differential from all other functionaries in the kingdom of Christ. These were:

(1.) They saw and heard and knew the Lord Jesus Christ Himself in person.

(2.) They were immediately called and chosen to that office by Christ Himself.

(3.) Infallible inspiration was an essential requisite to the exercise of that office.

(4.) The power of working miracles was an indispensable qualification to the full discharge of the duties of that office.

(5.) To them was specially given the power of imparting spiritual gifts and miraculous powers to others.

(6.) Their mission was universal—the whole world was the field of their operations.

(7.) They exercised, while they lived, a superintendence over all churches planted by their instrumentality, and their authority was paramount to all other functionaries.

The thirteen apostles chosen, ordained and endowed by the newly-crowned Messiah faithfully and fully executed their commission. When they entered into everlasting rest, the church was established, with all needful ministries to edify, extend and perpetuate it throughout all coming centuries. Then the extraordinary, which was necessary to found a new institution, was succeeded by the ordinary, which is sufficient to teach, regulate and govern the subjects of Christ's kingdom according to the laws that went forth from Jerusalem. The revelation of God was completed. The word of faith is henceforth nigh every believer, even in his mouth and in his heart. The apostolic office ceased, and evangelists and pastors became the permanent teachers and superintendents of the church.

CHAPTER III.

THE EVANGELISTIC OFFICE.

From the apostles the authority of Christ descends to evangelists. They are the next link in the chain of derived authority in the church.

The primary question in the discussion of the office of the evangelist in the church of Christ is this: What practical value to the modern church have the pastoral epistles of Paul—two to Timothy and one to Titus—which are a part of the New Testament canon? Is there any person or class in the church of to-day to whom the instructions contained in those epistles properly apply, and who are authorized to perform the duties therein enjoined? The determination of this question turns upon the relationship of the persons addressed in these epistles to the writer of them, and thus, incidentally, to the primitive church. Upon this pivot the evangelistic office hangs. Touching this point there are two theories. One is that Timothy and Titus were evangelists, in so far as they preached the Gospel, just as any other Christian may do, whether official or unofficial; but in so far as they did other things, such as appointing and ordaining elders or deacons, or otherwise setting in order the things that were wanting in the churches, they acted solely as the personal agents or representatives of Paul. In this view, Timothy and Titus, and others of the same class, as Barnabas, Silvanus, Tychicus, Epaphroditus and such men, were sub-apostles, not constitutionally, but personally, deputed to act as agents, or, to use a modern term, sub-legates, of the apostles in doing what belonged to the apostolic office, but what the apostles were unable to perform personally in all places where such work was needed.

If this be true, Paul's instructions to these agents in these pastoral letters have no application to persons not personally appointed and specially qualified to perform these duties of the apostolic office. Specific instruction for the appointment of a succession of such agents would be a constitutional provision for apostolic succession in the exercise of so much of the functions of the apostleship as is embraced in these instructions.

Paul's language in II Timothy ii : 2 is a commission to his own son in the faith, with authority to hand it, with its full content, to men whom he shall judge to be faithful; and they in turn are authorized to hand it down in like manner "to others also." This constitutes a legal succession in this office, which Timothy received from his inspired instructor. Assuming this to be the apostolic office in some measure, it becomes the modern bishop's office, with such functions as Timothy fulfilled in Ephesus, Titus in Crete, and other evangelists exercised in the provinces in which they labored. Among these functions are the proving and approving by ordination of presbyters and deacons in local congregations, trying and rebuking with all authority the elders that sin, and the settling of all questions that arise in the proper ordering of the churches within the given city or province. This sub-apostle theory of the relation of Timothy and Titus to the churches, which was invented to exclude the evangelistic office from the church of this century, puts the churches authoritatively under a bishop, with whose selection they have nothing to do, except indirectly.

The other theory, the one generally accepted by non-Episcopal bodies, may be stated thus: Timothy and Titus, as others of their class, were evangelists, so called because they were, first of all, "messengers who bring good news." That is, they were preachers of the Gospel, embracing all that pertains to the appearing and the kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ, whose duties are so extended as to cover the whole field of the applied principles of "the glorious Gospel of the blessed God," because of their intelligence, position and eminent fitness to perform these responsible duties. The apostles performed these necessary functions until others were qualified by their instructions to perform them. Then they constituted the office of evangelist, and inducted men into it, of whom Timothy and Titus are conspicuous examples. The evangelist is the first permanent officer in the kingdom of God, and his claim rests on firmer ground than that of an elder or pastor.) Professor J. W. McGarvey well says: "A special work assigned by proper authority to a given class of men, such as the elders of the church, constitutes them officers." The proper authority to assign a special work to elders is the evangelist in the primary organization of a local church, and hence there is no properly constituted eldership without a practical recognition of the work of the evangelist. He is the minister by whom men believe, and whose duty it is to care for the converts until he can leave them under proper care and leadership. In an orderly administration the evangelistic office is first in time and in authority. The pastor or elder who disregards its appropriate functions divests himself of rightful title to office.

Evangelists are an expressed gift of the ascended Lord. "When he ascended up on high, he led captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men. And he gave some, apostles; some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers." (Eph. iv:8, 11.)

The first two were extraordinary, and depended upon miraculous endowment of the Spirit. These special endowments ceased when the divine revelation was completed and the church was fully established and equipped. The last three depend upon native and acquired gifts, and a knowledge of the things learned of the apostles. They were made perpetual in the church by specific enactment, and will be needed so long as sinners are to be converted, the flock of God is to be fed and cared for, and the ignorant of all ages and conditions are to be instructed in the Word of God. These things were all necessary to be done then, have been necessary ever since, and are no less necessary now, and will be necessary in the onward victorious march of the church. President R. Milligan gives the following reasons for the perpetuity of this office:

"(1.) The evangelical work is a perpetual work. While time endures it will be the duty of the church, through her own chosen and appointed representatives, to convert and baptise the people; to gather the converts together into separate and distinct organizations for their edification, improvement and efficiency, and to have a watch-care over many weak and sickly congregations.

“(2.) Evangelists from the beginning received their commission from the churches, and not directly from Christ, as did the apostles and prophets. This may be illustrated by the case of Timothy, one of the most prominent and efficient of all the primitive evangelists.

“(3.) It is very clearly intimated by Paul in his second letter to Timothy.” (II Tim. ii:2.) (“Scheme of Redemption,” pp. 313, 314.)

(These considerations indicate the great practical value of these three pastoral letters. They define the work of evangelists, and instruct them in their duties, as Paul’s epistles to the churches instruct Christians in the details of congregational and individual life. The evangelistic office means a work to be done by an evangelist who has been chosen and set apart for the performance of that work. Without such an office these epistles are a dead letter. They can be carried into effect only by a usurpation.)

Now, assuming that the letters to Timothy and Titus have a useful place in the New Testament canon, there is a firm scriptural basis for such an office, and the further questions to be considered are these: 1. What are the duties of this office? 2. Who are eligible to the office? 3. How should the evangelist be selected and inducted into office? Definite answers to these inquiries will be found in these pastoral epistles of Paul, together with approved precedents recorded in the Acts of Apostles.

I. What are the duties of this office? (Let it be clearly noted, the evangelist is not a law-maker nor an original law-proclaimer. He is primarily a re-proclaimer of the law of the Lord as he has learned it through inspired apostles. What was thus learned by the primitive evangelists from the apostles in person can be learned by modern evangelists only from their writings.) Hence Paul says: “All scripture given by inspiration of God is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for discipline in righteousness, that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works." (II Tim. iii:16, 17.) "The man of God" of this passage is such an evangelist as Timothy was, as will be evident by comparing it with I Timothy vi:11: "But thou, O man of God, flee these things;" and verse 20: "O Timothy, keep that which is committed to thy trust." He must learn the apostles' doctrine, teach it to others, and be "an example of the believers, in word, in conversation, in charity, in spirit, in faith, in purity." (I Tim. iv:12.) Secondly, the evangelist is an executor of the will of God expressed in His law. He must apply the word of God in the regulation of the conduct of believers, and in the discipline of the churches. Note the following specifications:

(1.) Preach the word as to the appearing and the kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ. (II Tim. iv:1, 2.)

(2.) Reprove, rebuke, exhort with all authority. (II Tim. iv:2; Titus i:13, and ii:15; I Tim. vi:17-19.)

(3.) Prove and approve elders and deacons. (I Tim. 3d chap.; Titus i:5-9.)

(4.) Receive accusations against elders, and try them, or see that they are tried, by some scriptural tribunal, and rebuke them that sin. (I Tim. v:19-22; Titus iii:10, 11.)

(5.) Hold fast the form of sound words, and charge preachers to teach no other doctrine. (II Tim. i:13, 14; I Tim. i:3; Titus i:10-14.)

Such is "the work of an evangelist" as set forth by Paul, whereunto he must "watch in all things," even though he "endure afflictions." Only so can he "make full proof of his ministry." (II Tim. iv:5.)

Professor F. M. Bruner, in his "Model Church Work," says:

"It is clear from these selections (Acts xiii:1-3; I Cor. iv:17; I Thess. iii:2; Titus i:5, and 10-14; I Thess. i:3, 4; II Tim. iv:5; Rom. xv:20-23,) that the evangelist was not a local officer of the church, but that his duties were especially those of a messenger of good news. He was a necessity in pushing forward the work of planting and training churches, and his existence and activity in the field are as clear as that of Paul and Peter, who identified themselves with him, especially Paul. When Paul says of Timothy 'he does the work of the Lord even as I do,' and 'he shall bring you into remembrance of my ways, which be in Christ, how I teach everywhere and in every church;' and then in his letter to the same young man tells him to do the work of an evangelist, it is beyond doubt that Paul did the work of an evangelist—was an evangelist, sent out by the church at Antioch, as well as an apostle sent by Christ. Hence it is equally clear from Titus that the evangelist was also the agent through whom 'the things wanting' in existing congregations were supplied, such as the ordination of officers, the training and teaching of officers, and the exercise of a general watch-care in preserving the unity, soundness in the faith, and co-operation of all the churches. The Pope is the outgrowth of assumptions of power by bishops, not evangelists. The evangelical office was absorbed in that of the bishops, and the only barrier to an ecclesiasticism was removed."

A. Campbell taught that "evangelists constitute the living itinerant ministry of the church, sent abroad into the world and sustained in their labors by the church. They preach the word of life. They convert the world. They institute churches and set them in order."—("Millennial Harbinger" 1853, p. 481.)

II. Who are eligible to this office? Herein, also, there must be conformity to divine instruction, or the office will be stripped of all authority and efficiency. From this office women are excluded by an unmistakable prohibition. (I Tim. ii:11, 15.) The reasons given for this prohibition are not incidental and temporary, but they are co-extensive with human history, and are founded in the essential differentiation of the sexes, and the position which each was designed by the Creator to occupy in the domestic and social economy. (Titus ii:1-6; I Tim. v:2-14.) This is not a restriction of woman's exercising her gifts for the cause of Christ, but a requirement that she should use them in subjection to proper authority, and so as not to interfere with home life, nor to disturb the good order "in the house of God, which is the church of the living God." (I Tim. iii:15.) She may be a "helper in Christ Jesus" (Rom. xvi:1-3 and 12) as her gifts fit her for service.

Only such men are eligible as possess the specified requirements. "The man of God" must be learned in the holy scriptures, and continue in them. (II Tim. iii:14, 17; I Tim. iv:13-16.) He must be gentle unto all men, apt to teach, patient. (II Tim. ii:24-26.) He must be pure. (I Tim. v:22, vi:11; II Tim. ii:22.) He must have a good reputation where he is known. (Acts xvi:1-3.)

These qualifications demand the most thorough preparation, high moral attainments, wide experience and unfeigned and abiding faith. (If these instructions are strictly heeded and fully carried out, only the strongest, true and tried men will be found in the evangelistic office.)

III. How should an evangelist be selected and inducted into office? The call and ordination of Timothy furnishes an instructive example in response to this inquiry. Paul found him at Lystra, and learned of the faith of his mother and his grandmother, and that from a child he had known the holy scriptures. He learned also that he was well reported of by the brethren at Lystra and Iconium. He would have him to go forth with him. (Acts xvi:1-3.) Paul gave him an evangelical education, and taught him all the details of the important work to which he was about to be called. A gift was given him by prophecy "with the laying on of the hands of the presbytery." (I Tim. iv:14.)

This gift of God, which was in him, was conferred "by the putting on of Paul's hands." (II Tim. i:6.) It was given to him by prophecy, or according to prophecy; that is, by a particular inspiration or prophetic impulse moving Paul to make choice of Timothy for this office, and to approve him in this manner. This was a divine sanction of the person chosen as fit for these several functions, and of this form of investing him with the evangelistic office.

The presbytery united in the laying on of hands. McKnight says: "This is generally understood of the eldership of Lystra, who recommended Timothy to the apostle." The brethren at Iconium are also mentioned as recommending him, and the same reason will include the eldership at that place.

The number of congregations that should unite in such a service of installation in any given case is a matter of discretion. This approved precedent requires that at least two local congregations join it, led by some previously approved evangelist. The example warrants the conclusion that all the churches uniting in the recommendation of the candidate for ordination should be represented in the special service of official recognition. Common sense suggests that all the churches within his field of labor, if any there be, and who thereby become obligated for his support, should have some voice in the selection and ordination of the evangelist, with the supervision and wise direction of some experienced and well-known evangelist, who is charged with the duty of "setting in order the things that are wanting."

All Christian communities on earth, however numerous, constitute but one church of Christ; and in all cases where public officers are to be chosen, such as messengers of any general character, and especially evangelists, who are to be regarded as officers of the whole body, a concurrence of a plurality of churches by their officers or other chosen representatives should be regarded as necessary, if not to empower them to discharge official duties in a single congregation, at least necessary to give them general acceptance, and to constitute them public, responsible agents of the whole body.

This principle of congregational concurrence by authorized delegation arises from the nature of the Christian organization, as found in the explicit statements of the New Testament. (On this point the reader is referred to the "Millennial Harbinger" 1843, pp. 82 to 86.)

The only conceivable reason for the presbytery joining with Paul in thus inducting Timothy into this office (since they could impart no other gift), is that the inspired apostle might in this way stamp with his official seal this method of ordaining scripturally qualified men to the ecclesiastical offices to which they had been chosen.

Ordination involves the proving of the fitness of the candidate by competent testimony, or by a personal examination, to the satisfaction of a fairly representative body of men in the church, and the formal approval of him by prayer, fasting, and the imposition of hands by such body. As this was a time-honored custom of setting apart things to holy uses, and persons to sacred service of the Lord, and as it is clearly sanctioned by apostolic usage in appointing persons to official positions in the church, its authority cannot fairly be questioned, and its wisdom is attested by experience. The ceremony is beautiful and expressive in its parts and symbolism. Prayer is the recognition of God as the source of authority, and of wisdom and grace for the discharge of difficult and delicate duties. Fasting represents the subjugation of carnal appetite to the higher demands of the spiritual welfare.

The hand is the appropriate symbol of action, and the head is the seat of the brain. What could be more suggestive, therefore, of the conferring of office, than placing the hands of the church's representatives upon the head of a servant chosen for special service, to symbolize the impartation of power to act in that particular capacity which calls for all the force of brain and heart in a full performance of the required duties?

Then from this formal and real induction into the office, there flow certain natural and important consequences. Of course, the main facts of such an ordination will be recorded, and the record should be carefully preserved. A certified copy of this record is the evangelist's credential to the churches. A comparison with the original record will confirm a credential or detect a fraud. It is the orderly way to protect the church against clerical scamps and tramp "gospelers."

In the case of an ordained man's falling into sin or disrepute, a similar representative body will be the proper authority to inquire into his standing, and, if found unworthy, to withdraw the church's approval from him as an evangelist. A reference to an accurate record of such action will determine the status of any unworthy element. This is the scriptural remedy for a serious evil in the churches.

Only by a strict adherence to scriptural teaching and methods can the responsible office of the evangelist be held up to its high plane of dignity and usefulness and restored to its true place in the ecclesiastical system.

A faithful man of God, invested with the authority which rightly and scripturally belongs to the evangelistic office, can render a valuable service which no other can perform, in promoting the unity, the stability and the efficiency of the churches of Christ. He would go among them, not clad in priestly robes or clerical-cut coat, not with an air of superiority and parading his official rank and authority, but as a brother in the Lord, with the meekness and gentleness of Christ, admonishing the froward, strengthening the weak, reclaiming wanderers, warning the unruly, adjusting differences, settling difficulties, calming troubled waters, oiling with gracious counsel the wounded hearts of the aggrieved, and repairing the injury from incompetency in management, or official misdemeanor or maladministration. In case of serious and prolonged dissensions and disputations, he should be invited to come for relief with wise counsel and impartial supervision, but with a firm application of just principles in the settlement of the issues involved. In the light of New Testament teaching and discipline, such an intelligent and experienced servant of God can speedily reach a conclusion in any possible case that may arise in the churches that ought to be satisfactory to all parties concerned, and will be so adjudged by all other churches. This would effectually dam the chief source of the immense waste of energy and means that has been a tremendous tax upon ecclesiastical resources, and the most formidable hindrance to the victorious march of the army of the Lord against the combined forces of the world, the flesh and the devil. The omission of this constitutional provision for the systematic oversight and direction of all the forces in the entire field of Gospel conquest, is not only the weak point in the ecclesiastical harness of anybody that fails to recognize it, but it will prove to be the point of fatal inefficiency and ultimate failure to reproduce the practical unity of the early church.

The need of something to fill this place is becoming generally realized, as is manifest in various organic expedients, plans of organization and co-operation. But the true remedy will not be reached until there is a complete restoration of the New Testament evangelist. This important office, as clearly presented and illustrated in Paul's pastoral epistles, is essential to the good order, the catholic unity, and the highest efficiency of the whole body of Christ on earth. If it be not "the historic episcopate" that is so vital to the reunion of Christendom in the conviction of many intelligent and cultured men, it is better,—a scriptural provision for a wise superintendence of all the interests of the church, that readily adapts itself to all conditions of society, and may be extended over the universal church. Without this office the chain of derived authority in the church is broken, and human wisdom taxes itself to invent expedients to supply the missing link that binds the parts of the one body of Christ into "effectual working in the measure of every part." While Christian liberty allows the fullest exercise of sanctified sense "in making increase of the body unto the edifying itself in love," it does not allow the substitution of human expedients for divine appointments.

Another practical question demands brief notice. How shall the evangelist be supported in his official work?

This is the worldly side of the evangelistic office, which must be provided for as religiously and as systematically as any duty specifically enjoined in the Word of God. Because it is of a worldly nature, the details of it may be safely left, as they have been, to the enlightened business sense of Christian men, under the guidance of a few general principles. These are the same that Paul has laid down for the support of men in the pastoral office. Speaking of those "which minister about holy things," the apostle says: "Even so hath the Lord ordained that they which preach the Gospel should live of the Gospel." (I Cor. ix:14.) To Timothy he writes of the double honor due to presbyters who rule well, and labor in word and doctrine, and quotes the scripture which says: "Thou shalt not muzzle the ox that treadeth out the corn. And, The laborer is worthy of his reward" (I Tim. v:18.) To the Galatians he says: "Let him that is taught in the word communicate unto him that teacheth in all good things." (Gal. vi:6.) Jesus said: "The children of this world are wiser in their generation than the children of light." (Luke xvi:8.)

These passages warrant the following conclusions: First. It is an ordinance of the Lord that preachers, both pastors and evangelists, should be supported by those for whom they labor. Second. Christians should use the same common sense and business principles, sanctioned by the world's experience, in providing for the necessities of Christ's kingdom that they and the children of this world use in meeting their necessities in this world. The application of these principles to the subject in hand requires the districting of the territory in which Christian congregations are located so as to embrace churches enough to demand his full time, and that are able to give him a living support beyond the local and other claims upon them.

In 1853 A. Campbell wrote: "The churches had their angels, messengers or ministers from the first organization of the grand model of the church of all ages. It had its Lukes, its Marks, its Barnabases, its Philips, its Timothies, its Tituses, its Aristarchuses, its Aquilas, its Apolloses, etc., employed as itinerants and local evangelists. They had districts of churches and provincial fields of labor. They had churches through all Judea, in Syria, in Galatia, Macedonia and Asia Minor. * * * Districts inter-communicated with one another; not only churches in one and the same district, but churches in different districts." (See "Millennial Harbinger," 1853, p.302.) The interests of these churches were compact, intimate and concentrated, and their success and happiness was the occasion of simultaneous sympathy and exultation.

Every congregation should be encompassed by such a district, and within ready touch of some Timothy or Titus, Barnabas or Silvanus, who is authorized to come to help in time of need. He should aid shepherdless churches in securing pastors, prevent the disturbance of pastoral relations for trivial or unworthy reasons, and "strengthen the things which remain, that are ready to die" in Sardis and other places where the church "has a name to live and is dead," or dying, because their works are not "perfect before God." He should assist pastors in his district in extra services, and no evangelist should come to labor within a district without consultation with the evangelist in charge, as no pastor should enter into the field of a co-presbyter without invitation by his fellow-pastor. He might sometimes clasp the hand of fellowship with an adjacent evangelist across the boundaries of their districts, by exchange of labor in special services for the revival of churches and the conversion of sinners. Such a systematic co-operation between evangelists and pastors, with a joint responsibility for the church in a province or district, would stop a large percentage of the waste between the ingathering of souls and the training for life-service of Christ. There would be no need of this irresponsible evangelism, which leads to reports of large numbers added to the roll of church membership, but not to the Lord. When this rebuilding of the walls of "Jerusalem, which is from above, which is the mother of us all," is completed by extending fostering care to all her children through the restored evangelistic office, then, and not till then, a reunited church will have demonstrated its capability of enfold-ing the scattered tribes of divided spiritual Israel into the one house of God, "the church of the living God." (I Tim. iii:14, 15.)

CHAPTER. IV.

THE PASTORAL OFFICE.

From the evangelist the authority of Christ passes to pastors and teachers of local churches. These churches are the fruits of evangelical preaching and the translation of those who believe into the kingdom of Christ by compliance with the terms of the apostolic commission. These assemblies of new converts and others who may choose to associate with them must be set in order so they may properly observe all things commanded by the Head of the church.

The permanency and efficiency of local congregations require that some person or persons should be charged with the responsibility of oversight and instruction in them. This functionary may be called overseer, teacher, bishop, elder or pastor, all of which are used in the New Testament. But no term is more appropriate than pastor, which is borrowed from the beautiful pastoral life of the oriental shepherd.

The stated worship of God must be maintained. To this end a place of assembly must be selected with due regard to convenience and accessibility to the community. A brief and comprehensive church covenant should be adopted and placed on record, specifying the law by which the members agree to be governed, and pledging fidelity to each other in all mutual obligations.

This may not be essential to constitute a church, but it is indispensable to good order, to a proper legal status, and to the highest fulfillment of the mission of the church. It should be effected with deliberation, wisdom and greatest caution, to conform to the pattern of apostolic precedent.

The officers of a single church or congregation, as established by the apostles, consist of bishops and deacons. Paul addresses the church at Philippi as follows: "To all the saints in Christ Jesus who are at Philippi, with the bishops and deacons." (Phil. i: 1.) Again, in instructing Timothy concerning the qualifications of church officers, Paul gives the qualifications of bishops and deacons. These, therefore, constitute the officers of a local church. This brings us to the consideration of the function of the eldership in the work and management of a church or congregation.

The eldership is equivalent to the pastorate or the pastoral office. The term pastorate is used in current significance to represent the office, relation, or jurisdiction of a spiritual pastor. The word pastor, it is well known, means shepherd, and in the Scriptures applies to a man who acts as shepherd to the flock of God. It is rightly used in popular speech to designate a minister of the Gospel having charge of a congregation; one who cares for souls; one who discourses publicly on religious subjects to the people of his charge.

This office is a matter of prophecy. (Jer. iii: 15; xxiii: 3, 4.) God declares severe judgment against the selfish, negligent and wicked shepherds of Israel. The Messiah's relation to His subjects is foretold under this figure. (Ez. xxxiv:28.) A good flock was the glory of Palestine, and the relation of the shepherd to his flock is God's own illustration of His relation to His chosen people, and also the relation of the rulers and teachers which He gave to those who were under their guidance and instruction.

Pastor and flock are correlative terms, and in the government of God the flock has always required the pastor. The woe pronounced upon unfaithful shepherds, and disasters to the flock because there was no shepherd (Ez. xxxiv) unmistakably indicate God's will that every flock of His shall have a good shepherd, as without such a one no flock is safe or worth much to the owner or itself. Jesus is the Good Shepherd, the Chief Shepherd, and has provided under-pastors for all His flock.

How long the church in Jerusalem existed without elders or pastors, and in what manner they were appointed, cannot now be positively known. Several years after the beginning, on the day of Pentecost, in time of famine, when the Gentile church at Antioch sent relief to their Jewish brethren in Judea, we are informed, incidentally, that there were elders in the church at Jerusalem. Later, when the controversy arose concerning circumcision and the law of Moses, we find that the elders of the church in Jerusalem were associated with the apostles in the council which was held to settle the question.

When Paul and Barnabas made their missionary journey to Pisidian Antioch, Iconium, Lystra and Derbe, on their return through those cities, "they confirmed the souls of the disciples, exhorting them to continue in the faith, and that through many tribulations we must enter into the kingdom of God. And when they had appointed for them elders in every church, and had prayed with fasting, they commended them to the Lord, on whom they had believed." (Acts xiv: 22, 23.) From this apostolic precedent we learn that when a church needs, it may have a plurality of elders. This will not be the case at first, several months and perhaps years may elapse before this will be done. A church may exist, and even prosper, for a time without officers, or at least with nothing more than a temporary organization. But when the time arrives for a permanent organization according to primitive models, there will be a plurality in the eldership of the church that needs them.

It is not necessary to dwell at length upon the manner of selecting elders. In the case of the seven who were chosen to serve tables in Jerusalem, the congregation made choice of the persons, and the apostle appointed them over the business. A similar course should be pursued in the case of appointing elders. Indeed, it is asserted by Lechler in "Schaff-Herzog Encyclopædia," that these seven were both elders and deacons. He says: "The seven were both elders and deacons, as Chrysostom had the insight to perceive, and from their double office arose the eldership and the diaconate." (Art. "Presbyter.") Whether this view be correct or not, this is certainly an approved and therefore correct method of procedure. The congregation in some suitable manner should make choice of proper persons for the office, and then, by fasting and prayer and the laying on of hands, the persons selected should be solemnly ordained to the office of elder, bishop or pastor.

The duties and responsibilities of the eldership can best be learned from an examination of the words and passages which indicate the duties and work of the office. There are seven words, five nouns and two verbs, which are used in reference to this office, and which express very much relative to the duties and work of the eldership. These will now be considered.

I. Elder. This is the first term applied to this officer. The church in Jerusalem had elders. When the church at Antioch sent relief to the brethren in Judea, during the famine which occurred in the days of Claudius Cæsar, the contribution was sent to the elders by the hands of Barnabas and Paul. Sixteen years later, at the time of another famine, Paul went up to Jerusalem bearing contributions from the churches of Galatia, Achaia and Macedonia. Arriving at Jerusalem, he visited James, and all the elders were present. This word, as an official designation, is of Hebrew origin.

Elders, among the Jews, were the rulers of the people, prominent men who took the lead in directing and controlling affairs. The elders of a city corresponded to our councilmen, just as we now call them "city fathers." The elders of the people were their representatives and rulers in the government and management of affairs pertaining to the public welfare. As an official term, therefore, this word expresses the idea of a government by men of age, prominence, experience, wisdom. It indicates that this office is one that imposes important duties and grave responsibilities, and that it should be filled by men who are competent to perform the work devolving upon them efficiently and successfully. It indicates that an incompetent eldership is a great misfortune, and disastrous in its consequences.

II. Bishop. Bishop is of Greek origin. It is a corruption of the Greek word, episcopos, which signifies overseer or superintendent. In I Peter, ii: 25, the word is applied to Jesus Christ. In Paul's farewell interview with the Ephesian elders, he calls them bishops or overseers. In Paul's letter to Titus we are informed that Titus was left in Crete to set in order the things that were wanting, and appoint elders in every city, "if any be blameless." Then we are told that a bishop must be blameless. These two passages demonstrate that these two words, elder and bishop, are applied to the same office, and describe the same officer. The word episcopos expresses the idea of supervision or superintendence; it involves taking charge and oversight of affairs, including the authority to manage and direct them. Superintendent is the best English equivalent of the Greek word episcopos, rendered bishop or overseer. Hence elders are the overseers or superintendents of the affairs and interests of the church. Watch-care, superintendence, management and control of the interests of the church are the duties indicated by the word bishop.

III. Pastor. Jesus speaks of Himself as the Good Shepherd. (John x: 11, 14.) In Hebrews, Jesus is called the "great shepherd of the sheep," and Peter calls Him "the chief shepherd," "the shepherd and bishop of our souls." A great shepherd implies smaller ones, a chief shepherd subordinate ones. The elders of the church are to be shepherds to the flock, the church. Paul says to the Ephesian elders, "Take heed unto yourselves, and to all the flock in which the Holy Spirit has made you bishops, to be shepherds of the church of God, which he has purchased with his own blood." (Acts xx: 28.) And Peter says: "The elders, therefore, among you I exhort, who am a fellow-elder, and a witness of the sufferings of Christ, who also am a partaker of the glory that shall be revealed. Be shepherds of the flock of God which is among you, exercising the oversight, not of constraint, but willingly, according to God; nor yet for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind; neither as lording it over the charge allotted to you, but making yourselves examples to the flock. And when the chief shepherd shall be manifested, ye shall receive the crown of glory that fadeth not away." (I Pet. v: 1-4.) The word "feed" does not express the full meaning of poimaino; "tend" is better, but to be a shepherd expresses the idea completely. The elders of the church are to perform the duties of a pastor or shepherd of a flock. These duties include four things:

(1.) Feeding the flock. The shepherd must see that the flock is supplied with sufficient and wholesome food.

(2.) Guiding the flock. The shepherd goes before the flock and leads them out to the fields in the morning and home at night. "He maketh them to lie down in green pastures, and leadeth them beside the still waters."

(3.) Watching the flock. The shepherd cares for the flock, takes care of the lambs, and keeps the sheep from straying away from the flock, and if one strays he goes after him and brings him back to the fold.

(4.) Guarding the flock. The shepherd, like David, must protect the flock from the attack of wild beasts, from the wolves, lions and bears that seek to devour and destroy.

These duties, in a spiritual sense, are to be performed by the elders of the church. They are to feed the church upon the word of God, to guide or lead in the paths of righteousness, take care of the fold, care for the lambs or babes in Christ, keep the members from straying, reclaim the erring, and protect the church from immoral and heretical teachers or preachers.)

IV. Teacher. After apostles and prophets, in I Cor. xii: 28, we have "thirdly teachers." In Eph. iv: 11, "pastors and teachers" stand forth in the list. Pastors and teachers are two words for the same officers in the office of elder, or bishop. The Greek word is didaskalos, not rhetor; a teacher, not an orator. Tertullus was an orator (Acts xxiv: 1,) but not a teacher; elders are to be teachers, but not necessarily orators.

The modern demand that pastors of churches shall be pulpit orators, to attract and captivate the people by glittering rhetoric and fascinating oratory, is not a scriptural requirement. Paul's speech and preaching were not in enticing words of wisdom, and he warns the Colossians lest they should be beguiled with enticing words. The elder or pastor of the church is to be a teacher of the Word of God; he should be "a learned man, and mighty in the scriptures;" he should "be able both to exhort in the sound teaching, and to convict the gainsayers," by a clear and faithful presentation of the truth; he should build up Christians on their most holy faith, and convert others to the truth and to the Lord Jesus Christ. In his labor in word and teaching, he should preach not himself, but the Lord Jesus Christ, and teach his hearers to observe all the commands of Christ.

V. President. This term is indicated in the following passages: "We beseech you, brethren, to know them that labor among you, and are over you in the Lord, and admonish you: and to esteem them exceeding highly in love for their work's sake." (I Thess. v: 12, 13.) "Let the elders that rule well be counted worthy of double honor, especially those who labor in the word and in teaching." (I Tim. v: 17.)

"To be over" and "to rule" are translations of the same Greek word. It signifies "to set before or in front, to set at the head as leader, to set over;" intransitively, "to be set over, to be at the head of, to manage, govern, preside." Roth-erham translates the word "preside" in both of these passages. Elders, then, are over the church to preside over its affairs, to direct and govern its interests, and they should preside well, as God's stewards, that shall be required to give an account of their stewardship in the great judgment day.

VI. Leader. "Remember them that have the rule over you, who have spoken unto you the word of God." (Heb. xiii: 7.) "Obey them that have the rule over you, and submit yourselves: for they watch for your souls, as they that must give account, that they may do it with joy, and not with grief: for that is unprofitable for you." (Heb. xiii: 17.)

The word rendered "rule" in these passages signifies "to go before, to show the way, to guide; to lead, as an army or fleet, and so to command, to rule; to be a guide, a leader, ruler, chief." These scriptures, therefore, teach us that the elders of the church who teach the word of God, and upon whom devolves the watch-care of the souls of church members, are the leaders, guides, or rulers of the church. They are to take the lead in guiding and governing its affairs, in managing its interests, and in promoting its welfare.

VII. Governor. Among other things God has appointed governments in the church. (I Cor. xii: 28.) The original word is from a verb which signifies "to steer a ship." (Lat. gubernare.) From this Greek word, through the Latin, are derived the words govern, governor, and government. As a pilot directs the movements of his ship, so a governor guides and directs the affairs of the state. So the elders of the church in their government are the pilots of the church to give direction to all things that pertain to its management and prosperity.

This examination of the words and passages which relate to the eldership authorizes and sustains the following positions:

The terms elder, or presbyter; bishop, or overseer; pastor, teacher, president and ruler, are simply different words used to describe the same officer of the church. There should be, when practicable, a plurality of these officers in each church. These officers constitute the eldership of the church, and are invested with the governing power. This eldership exercises authority over a single congregation or local church. As a corollary from this, it follows that a minister of the Gospel located with a church as its teacher is ex-officio one of its elders, and a part of the governing authority in the church. When a church calls a minister, it calls him to the eldership of that church, and to all the duties of that office. And when a minister accepts the position, he accepts the office of elder, with all the duties and responsibilities which that office imposes.

The duties of the eldership are comprehended in two general classes:

(a) The first class of duties are expressed by the terms preaching, teaching, instruction, confutation, exhortation. The elders are to speak the Word of God; some one of them, at least, is to labor in the Word and in teaching; they are to preach the Gospel to the world, and teach Christ's commands to the church. They are "to be able both to exhort in the sound teaching and to convict the gainsayers;" they are to stop the mouths of vain talkers and deceivers by a clear and convincing presentation of the truth; they are to confute error, and establish the truth of the Gospel in the hearts and consciences of men. As a corollary from this, it follows that the teaching in the church Bible-school comes legitimately and necessarily under the direction and jurisdiction of the eldership. No teaching should be permitted in the Sunday-school that is not approved by the elders of the church. They should teach the Sunday-school teachers the Word of God.

A pastor should be ex-officio superintendent of the superintendent and teachers of the Sunday-school. I do not say that he should teach or preside at the teachers' meetings, but I do say that he should see to it that this sacred work is in the hands of faithful and competent teachers.

The entire work of teaching or instruction in the church is under the control and direction of its eldership. With a competent and faithful eldership, a church is in no danger of being ruined by false teachers, by wolves in sheep's clothing, by ministers of Satan disguised in the garb of ministers of truth and righteousness.

(b) The second class of duties includes the ideas expressed by the words ruling, authority, government, management, watch-care, admonition, discipline. As elders, the authority of church government rests upon them; as bishops or overseers, the management and superintendence of the affairs and interests of the church are intrusted to them; as pastors, they are to exercise a shepherd's watch-care over their flock, the church, feeding it, guiding it, tending it, caring tenderly for the lambs of the fold, watching the flock lest any go astray, going after the erring and lost, and endeavoring to reclaim and restore them, guarding the flock and protecting it from the attacks of wolves and other beasts of prey. They are to preside over the meetings of the church, and conduct its worship; they have jurisdiction of the music, and of the singers, directing the song-service so that it shall be worship to the glory of God, and not a mere entertainment to the glory of the singer; they are to direct the work of the church in its various activities; the management of the Sunday-school,

..... etc., all come under the supervision of the eldership of the church. In short, everything in the work of the church comes under the superintendence and jurisdiction of the eldership. They have charge of the work of discipline in its broad and scriptural sense, including training, admonition, correction and restoration of the erring, and involving exclusion only as a final step. They are not to do all this work, but they are to direct and superintend it. As fathers who are successful in family government, the elders are to exercise the discipline of the church in a parental manner, their duties in this work being of a judicial character. In all their work, they are not to lord it over the church, but to be examples to the flock, and to be leaders or pilots, to guide and manage the interests of the church so as rightly and most effectively to promote its welfare and prosperity.

.....

.....

.....

.....

A minister and the other elders associated with him in the government of the church, as stewards of the house of God, must watch for the souls of the membership, as they that shall give account. This gives us some idea of the solemn responsibility that rests upon the eldership. Oh, that the duties of the office were always so faithfully performed that the Judge might be able to say to all in the great day of final account: "Well done, good and faithful servants!"

Faithful is the saying, "If a man seek the office of a bishop, he desires a good work." Truly it is a noble and an important work, a difficult and a responsible work. It is a work which involves many and varied duties, and imposes weighty responsibilities. We may well inquire, Who is sufficient for these things? Success in this work depends very largely upon the character and abilities of the persons selected to perform the duties of the office. Who should be chosen elders or rulers of the congregation? What should be their qualifications?

In the third chapter of First Timothy, Paul gives instruction to Timothy concerning the qualifications of a bishop. In the first chapter of Titus he gives similar instructions to Titus. Surely great care should be exercised in this matter of the organization of a church, and whenever elders are to be chosen! Hence Paul directs Titus to appoint elders, if any persons possess the requisite qualifications; otherwise not. The qualifications mentioned by Paul are essential qualifications—"A bishop must be blameless," etc. It is not a question of desirability merely, but of necessity. It is necessary that the bishop possess these qualifications in order properly and successfully to perform the duties incumbent upon him.

These qualifications may be divided into three classes, namely: First, those which relate to personal character. Second, those which indicate didactic ability. Third, those which indicate administrative ability.

(a) We will first consider those qualifications which relate to personal character. First of all, an elder or bishop should be a man, an honorable, upright, manly man. He should be such a one as the poet describes:

"A combination and a form, indeed,
Where every god did seem to set his seal
To give the world assurance of a man."

Or, as another writer has said:

"His life was gentle, and the elements
So mixed in him, that nature might stand up
And say to all the world, 'This was a man!'"

A bishop must not be a new convert, lest, being inflated with pride, he fall into the condemnation of the devil. He must be hospitable, orderly—that is polite, or of good behavior, not a brawler, nor striker, not contentious, nor passionate, but gentle, and abstinent in respect to wine or intoxicants; not covetous, or greedy of filthy lucre; a lover of good, just, holy; he must be blameless, or without reproach, and have a good reputation among those who are outside of the church. This description of the personal character of the man who is to be chosen to the office of elder or bishop brings before us the picture of a grand character. Such a man is gentle, peaceable, sociable, companionable, upright, pious, generous, exemplary.

He will be a practical illustration of the principles of Christianity in his daily life of righteousness, hospitality and liberality. Of pure and blameless life, he will be esteemed by those outside of the church, and will be a living commendation of Christianity everywhere and to everybody.

(b) We will next consider those qualifications which indicate didactic ability. He must be apt to teach, didactic. As an elder or bishop is a teacher of the word of God, he must possess the readiness and ability to teach, "holding to the faithful word, which is according to the teaching, that he may be able both to exhort in the sound teaching, and to convict the gainsayers."

He must be able to present and maintain the truth of the Gospel, and to confute the errors of false teachers. Attention is again called to the fact that it is didactic and not rhetorical ability that is required. The inspired writer by the word used has discriminated in favor of instruction, rather than oratory. The work of a competent and efficient teacher is less superficial and more permanent than that of an orator. The results may not appear so large, estimated by the number of additions reported, but they will be found to be much larger when viewed in the calcium light of eternity.

(c) There remain to be considered those qualifications which indicate administrative ability. A bishop must be of sound mind, or of good judgment. This is necessary because much that is to be done by the eldership requires the exercise of a wise discretion. A bishop must not be self-willed, but, on the contrary, self-controlled; for in order to govern others, he must first be able to govern himself. [A bishop must be the husband of one wife. He must be a married man, and his marriage relations must conform to the law of God respecting marriage and divorce. A bishop must rule well his own house, "having his children in subjection with all gravity; for if a man know not how to rule his own house, how shall he take care of the church of God?" A large part of the duties of the eldership consists in governing and superintending; the administration of church affairs and discipline requires executive ability and experience in dealing with disorderly or disobedient persons. He who is the head of a well-regulated family, "having faithful children, not accused of riot or unruly," by his experience and success in family government, demonstrates his ability to manage successfully the difficult work of church discipline. But if he is unsuccessful in government at home, how can anything else than failure be expected if he is intrusted with the management of the interests of the church? The reason why proper discipline is often so sadly neglected, or so unwisely managed, may, perhaps, be found in the lack of experience or success, or both, on the part of the elders in family government.

The apostle Paul had good reason for putting in all these qualifications. Given a man whose personal character is such as Paul describes, whose ability to teach and to govern is such as is indicated by the qualifications required, and we have a man who is competent to perform the duties of an elder or bishop of a church. Such a man, acting conscientiously and faithfully as overseer or pastor, will do a noble, important and necessary work and do it successfully. Without these qualifications, his work will result in blunders, failure and disaster. Would that all church elders were properly and fully qualified to perform the duties of this office! When the eldership shall be composed of men possessing the requisite qualifications, then will the churches be wisely governed, successfully managed and properly disciplined.

The responsibility and functions of the eldership are perpetual in the church. To promote and secure the highest prosperity of the church, there should be a regularity and uniformity of administration. In order to this, it is necessary to have permanency in the office. There ought to be, therefore, as few changes as possible in the eldership. One great imperfection in the Levitical priesthood was its changeable character, the High Priest not being permitted to continue on account of death. Would that this were the only obstacle to permanency in the eldership! Great care should be exercised in choosing the right persons for the office, and then they should be permanently set apart or ordained to the office. The practice in some churches of electing elders every year is not to be commended. And the practice of employing preachers by the year, and voting once a year upon their continuance, is likewise to be deprecated. A preacher located with a church as one of its elders or pastors should be regarded as a permanent part of the church, and a change be made only when necessity requires it, and, when made, it should be done as peaceably as possible. It is better to sacrifice and suffer than to destroy the peace and prosperity of the church. All personal considerations should be subordinated to the interests of the cause of Christ.

Some things are due to the eldership from the church. What these things are may be learned from the following passages of Scripture:

"But we beseech you, brethren, to know them that labor among you, and are over you in the Lord, and admonish you; and to esteem them exceeding highly in love for their work's sake." (I Thess. v: 12, 13.)

"Remember them that have the rule over you, who have spoken unto you the word of God." (Heb. xiii: 7.)

"Obey them that have the rule over you, and submit yourselves; for they watch for your souls, as they that must give account, that they may do it with joy and not with grief; for that is unprofitable for you." (Heb. xiii: 17.)

"Let the elders that rule well be counted worthy of double honor, especially those who labor in the word and in teaching. For the scripture saith: 'Thou shalt not muzzle the ox when he treadeth out the corn. And, The laborer is worthy of his hire.'" (I Tim. v: 17, 18.)

If the elders are placed in authority in the church, the members are to be in submission; if the elders are to be overseers, the members are to work under their superintendence; if the elders are to lead, the members are to follow their guidance; if the elders are to be shepherds to the flock of God, the members of the flock are to be subject to their counsel, guidance and control; if the elders are to labor in the word and in teaching, the members are to learn from them the word of God, to give them faithful, moral support in preaching the Gospel and maintaining the law of Christ, and to give them necessary financial support.

Mutual relations impose corresponding obligations. Hence the members of the church should recognize the authority of the elders and their obligations to them to learn from them the law of Christ, to submit to them and obey them, to work under their direction, to sustain them in the discharge of their official duties, to compensate them for services rendered, giving double remuneration to those who both rule and labor in the word and in teaching, and to esteem them highly in love for their work's sake.

Sectarianism seriously hinders supplying the churches with a scriptural eldership, since it prevents a realization of the New Testament conception of the church in a town or city. If all Christians in one place were in one church and under one eldership, it would not be so difficult to obtain scripturally qualified elders. As it is, however, it is very difficult to find persons properly qualified in sufficient numbers to supply the demands of several churches in one place. This is one, but only one, of the evils of sectarianism. Were the New Testament idea of a church in a place realized, we should have all the Christians in one place under one eldership and controlled by one board of management and superintendence, very much as our public schools in each city are under the control and direction of one superintendent and board of education. This would give us the scriptural conception of the eldership and its functions, and we could then have, without much difficulty, scripturally qualified persons for elders.

If it be asked, "What should be done if a church does not have in its membership persons who are scripturally qualified for elders?" I answer, "Wait until it does have persons scripturally qualified." If such persons are not in the church, make some temporary or provisional arrangement until persons possessing the requisite qualifications can either be found or developed. The evangelist

. should seek suitable persons, if there are any, and educate, train and qualify them for the eldership of the church. Eldership signifies leadership. We need to train or educate men for the eldership, to be rulers or leaders of the church, just as much as to educate men for the ministry to preach the Gospel. With some temporary provision for the management of its interests, a church will prosper better without elders than with incompetent ones, who do not die, and will not resign. The grace of resignation is not apt to abound in that kind of persons. And their blunders in office, and their willfulness in refusing to surrender the office when called upon to do so by the church, sometimes result in disaster and ruin to the church. Paul says to Timothy: "Lay hands hastily on no man, neither be partaker of other men's sins; keep thyself pure." (I Tim. v: 22.) Great care should be exercised that only proper persons are ordained to the pastoral office. The wisdom that is from above, and not human wisdom, should guide in this matter, and in all things that pertain to the welfare and prosperity of the church of Christ. The endeavor should be to reproduce the New Testament church in membership, in organization, in officers, in management, and in earnest and faithful work for Christ, and to conform more and more perfectly in individual and church life to the pattern given in the New Testament, and thus "grow up in all things into him who is the head, even Christ, from whom all the body fitly framed and knit together, through that which every joint supplieth, according to the working in due measure of each several part, maketh the increase of the body unto the building up of itself in love." (Eph. iv: 15, 16.)

The number of elders or pastors in any local church can only be settled by a wise expediency. The style of the inspired writers is to speak of all the disciples of our Lord in any city or center of population, with its surrounding rural districts, as the church in that city or province, though they may have met in several assemblies. It is said that the church in Jerusalem assembled in fifty different places. The leaders of these several assemblies were the elders at Jerusalem.

The statement already cited that Paul and Barnabas "ordained elders in every church" (Acts xiv: 23) is the nearest assertion of a plurality of elders in each congregation to be found in sacred history. The only fair inferences from this fact are that the church existed prior to the ordination of elders, and that every church circumstanced as the church in the cities named may have plurality of elders.

The fact that pastors were to be supported, and the elders were forbidden to take the oversight "for filthy lucre," (Pet. v: 1-3) suggests the practical solution of the problem. When speaking of him "who feedeth the flock," and the provisions of the law of Moses for them "which minister about holy things," Paul says, "Even so hath the Lord ordained that they which preach the gospel should live of the gospel." (I Cor. ix: 7-14.)

This is the ordinance of the Lord for the support of pastors and evangelists. A congregation will not sustain more pastors than is needed to properly tend the flock, and can justly claim only such part of his time and services as it can fairly recompense.

There is not sufficient scriptural warrant for the distinction between teaching elders and ruling elders, as aptness to teach as well as to rule is a requisite qualification for the office. A prudent pastor, however, will always have near him, in counsel and approval, the intelligent, pious and influential members of the congregation, whether by his own choice or by the selection of the church. A humble man will be glad to have wise and godly men to share the responsibility of his delicate and often trying position.

But the practical lesson is that the churches of Christ everywhere should make systematic efforts to furnish themselves, either alone or in combination with those contiguous to them, with such Christian instruction and oversight as are adequate to the present demands of society and the present elevation of the intellectual and spiritual standard. A faithful pastor's study is the watch-tower on the walls of salvation, from which he discerns approaching danger and arms himself for successful guarding of the spiritual interests of his people.

CHAPTER V.

THE DEACON'S OFFICE.

The conjoining of "bishops and deacons" in Paul's letter "to the saints in Christ Jesus which are at Philippi," brings them into peculiar prominence. What that prominence is as to bishops is not a matter of conjecture. They are the official superintendents of the church, the pastors of the flock. The association of deacons with them implies an official relation of some kind. Its precise nature is not so clearly defined as is that of pastors.

The term deacon is a transliteration of the Greek diakonos. This word is applied to servants at a feast (John ii:5-9); to a civil officer, as a minister of God (Rom. xiii:4); to Jesus Christ as a minister of the circumcision (Rom. xv:8); to preachers as ministers by whom we believe (I Cor. iii:5); to Phebe, a servant of the church (Rom. xvi:1); and to a class of brethren who are required to have certain specified qualifications (I Tim. iii:8-13). These qualifications are about the same as those required in bishops, so far as they relate to personal fitness. This suggests that these brethren were called into official relation to the church, as that would be an approval of their characters, and no church can afford to stamp with approbation, as an office-bearer, any man who is not a fair representative of Christian profession.

Aptness to teach is not among the qualifications for this service, hence these deacons were not preachers as such, though if they possessed gifts of speech it would not disqualify them for the position, and might be exercised on occasion. So if they use the office of a deacon well, they purchase to themselves a good degree and great boldness in the faith which is in Christ Jesus.

The chief indication of the special service to be rendered by this class of officials is found in the selection of the seven men to attend to the daily ministration when there arose a murmuring of the Grecians against the Hebrews because their widows were neglected. (Acts i:6.) This emergency called for a special service,—a diakonia,—the service to be rendered by a diakonos. Whatever this was belongs to work to be done by those who were selected for the particular duty then required. It was not preaching, but was to relieve the preachers, so they need not leave the Word of God. The twelve apostles demanded men “of honest report, full of the Holy Spirit and wisdom.” The whole multitude of disciples chose the seven brethren of this description, and set them before the apostles, who appointed them over this business by prayer and laying on of hands. They approved the choice, and inducted these deacons into office by formal ordination. This was evidently in the mind of Paul in his instruction to Timothy. He specifies the qualities that deacons must have. (I Tim. iii:8-13.) They must be grave, i. e., men of weight in the community, and command the respect of those without and the acquiescence of those within. They must shun duplicity, wine-drinking and greed of gain, but hold the faith in a pure conscience. Like bishops, they must be first proved, then approved, as being found blameless. Then, and not till then, “let them use the office of a deacon.” They should be exemplary in their domestic relations and in the management of their households. Their wives, also, should have like dignity and prudence, that they may not injure the usefulness of their husbands, and may serve as deaconesses if called to render such service. Phebe, our sister, was a deaconess of the church in Cenchrea. (Rom. xvi:1.) Reference is given to married persons having but one wife, but not as excluding those who are unmarried and otherwise qualified, when circumstances demand their service. The nature of the business over which the deacons are placed is to “serve tables.”

It has been truly said they must provide for three tables in the church of the living God. These are the table of the Lord, the table of poor saints, and the table of the preacher. That is, the deacon's duties include the care of the house of worship and making provision for the orderly administration of the ordinances of the Lord, the oversight of the needy members of the congregation, and the raising of funds for the support of the pastor and for the general enterprises of the church. They attend to the financial, material and other interests of the church, under the supervision of the pastor and other elders. These are highly important duties, and essential to the prosperity of a congregation. If there were no hint of a deacon's office in the Holy Scriptures, the church would need to constitute such an office, in the exercise of liberty to do in the wisest way whatever is necessary to be done in the fulfillment of its mission. The most natural interpretation of the passages that mention deacons in connection with bishops gives sufficient recognition of such office by divine authority.

The efficiency of the church depends largely upon a prompt, systematic and faithful discharge of the duties that belong to this office. The best business talent that is available should be enlisted in this service and charged with its responsibility. The same business principles which experience has attested in successful enterprises of worldly affairs should be applied in Christian work.

These require regular meetings of this board of ecclesiastical financiers, a careful record of official transactions, an accurate inventory of resources and prospective income, and a complete statement of necessary outlays. As the church is in fact a joint-stock company, in which each member is pledged to contribute for the expenses of the establishment according to ability, an apportionment should be made as nearly equitable as may be in the judgment of the deacons, assigning to each member such portion of the needed expenditures that the congregation has decided upon as accords with his proportionate ability.

Since they cannot be supposed to know the exact ability of each member, they can only approximate a just apportionment, which should be subject to revision upon submission of the amount to each individual for his acceptance, with such modification as meets his approval. The expenses should be kept within the income, unless there be a margin that can be counted on to cover any deficit that may appear at the end of the year.

A collection by envelopes should be taken at every Lord's Day service, so that the channel of communication from the private purses to the public treasury may be ever open and clearly understood, and due credit may be given to individual contributors. This is an act of worship, the same as preaching, praise, prayer and communion. It is "the fellowship" (Acts ii:42), in distinction from other religious privileges in which the worshippers share in common. The koinonia of Christians in regard to money is a contribution (Rom. xv:26) in which all participate equally, in the measure of ability of each, for the purposes of the church. These embrace two specified objects, viz.: "for the poor saints" and "for the gospel," (Phil. i:5 and iv:15-18) and implicitly include all benevolent and evangelistic enterprises. These sweep over the whole field of Christian activities.

The weekly contribution was ordered by Paul in the churches of Galatia and at Corinth (I Cor. xvi:1, 2), and presumably it was practiced with his sanction by them of Macedonia and Achaia. This is the sanctified common sense of an apostle, which is an approved precedent for using the highest wisdom at command to meet the necessities of the cause under existing surroundings. Inspiration does not turn sensible men into impracticables, and conversion to Christ does not change bright business men into slavish imitators of old methods that were adapted to conditions of society that vary with times and environments.

The Pauline law of expediency has full force in this field of prudential arrangement. "All things are lawful for me, but all things are not expedient; all things are lawful for me, but all things edify not." (I Cor. x:23.)

Whatever is lawful, that is, moral, for any man to do, is right for a Christian to do. But expediency limits the law of universal right by excluding those things which, though not wrong, do not edify, or are not successful. This law approves, if not demands, the use of any righteous means to accomplish a required end, and enlightened wisdom chooses the best methods within reach, guided by whatever light the Word of God throws upon the subject in hand. This law of expediency is excluded from matters of faith and morals, but determines matters of policy within the wide range of human discretion. The discretionary affairs of the church come chiefly within the duties of the deacon's office, but the same principle applies in the administration of spiritual as well as temporal affairs, and should control in all things that are left to human judgment in securing the orderly and the best attainable service, in praise, teaching, ruling, and every mode of church edification. The infinite wisdom of the Supreme Ruler in the Kingdom of Heaven has given widest scope for the freest exercise of all the consecrated powers of redeemed man in building up the cause of the Redeemer, and in the promotion of human welfare.

The deacon's office is one of great dignity and responsibility. It may be magnified in several directions, far beyond anything that is usually assigned to it in the churches. It calls for high order of talent, and any congregation is fortunate indeed that has suitable persons in its membership to discharge its duties promptly and systematically.

The board of deacons should consist of three to nine persons, according to the number of the congregation and the eligible members. They would properly constitute the board of trustees. As this is a civil rather than an ecclesiastical office, they should be elected in accordance with civil law, and the tenure of office would better be limited to a term of years, say three, and a part of the board elected each year. The fact of being deacons would not constitute them trustees, nor hinder their election to that responsibility. They should be incorporated under the laws of the state, so as to become the legal representatives of the church in all matters affecting the property rights and the financial interests of the church. They would then be competent to receive bequests from persons who might wish to place means in their hands in trust for the use of the congregation, and could be held legally accountable for the faithful execution of the trust.

A congregational seal should be provided for each local church, to stamp all official papers issued in behalf of the body. This would be a guarantee against frauds that are so frequently perpetrated by unscrupulous professors upon unsuspecting communities.

The deacons are the almoners of the church, and this phase of their work may be extended to embrace any form of wise beneficiary association. The church is not only a benevolent institution, but a mutual benefit society. If it were up to its best, equipped for its fullest opportunity and working out its highest efficiency, there would be no occasion for members to unite with worldly societies to make provision for themselves in the event of sickness or misfortune, and for becoming burial when death comes.

There is no reason why a church may not embrace every beneficiary feature of prudent and well-conducted associations of a moral and social character in a Christian administration of its affairs by a competent diaconate, for the benefit of all its members who will avail themselves of these advantages. There are many reasons why Christians should not be obliged to enter into association with worldly people to obtain the benefits they wish which commend themselves to prudent foresight. The church that would accomplish the most for the spiritual welfare of mankind must have the profoundest sympathy for the temporal welfare of its own fellowship, and of those in touch of its influence and agencies. While it should be a hive of industrial activities, the deacons are the official directors of the temporalities of the church, which should sweep over the entire circle of congregational and individual well-being within the circumference of associated moral, social and religious life. The scriptural recognition of the deacon's office, and the requisites for it, and the large liberty secured in the Gospel of Christ, lift it up to a dignity and lofty plane of usefulness and of blessing to the church and the world far beyond any present attainment.

CHAPTER VI.

WOMAN'S WORK.

The chief question to be considered under this head, as it stands related to church polity, is this: According to the scriptures, have women a right to be pastors and evangelists? It is important that the question be clearly defined and correctly understood. The question is not, "May women sing, pray and speak in religious meetings, teach in Sunday-school, or make temperance addresses?" At proper times and places, and under proper circumstances, a woman may do any of these that she is capable of doing. She has a right to enjoy and exercise the freedom permitted to her under the law of liberty, and wherein that law does not restrict her she is not to be bound. The question is this: "May women be pastors and evangelists? May they occupy these important official positions in the government and work of the church of Christ?"

To answer this properly, it will be necessary to consider some other questions, which underlie this one, and which must be understood in order to answer this question correctly. These other questions are two in number, and are as follows:

- (1.) What is the true relation of the sexes to each other?
- (2.) What are the principles of the law of Christ which pertain to these offices which He has established in His church?

In answering these questions, the Word of God is the supreme and final authority. It is here assumed that the teaching of the New Testament bearing upon this subject is as applicable to this age as it was at the time it was written, since the Gospel of Christ is to continue to the end of time, and is for all nations. It is not for us to explain away any part of scripture teaching. Whatever the scriptures teach concerning any subject should be accepted as an end of all controversy. "Where the scriptures speak, we speak; and where the scriptures are silent, we are silent." The only question then is: "What do the scriptures teach with reference to this subject?" Our appeal is "to the law and the testimony."

I. What is the relation of the sexes to each other? In considering this question, attention is first invited to the Mosaic account of the creation of man: "And God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them." (Gen. i:27.) "And the Lord God said, It is not good that the man should be alone; I will make him an helpmeet for him." (Marg. R. V.—or "answering to him." Gen. ii:18.) "And the Lord caused a deep sleep to fall upon the man, and he slept; and he took one of his ribs, and closed up the flesh instead thereof; and the rib which the Lord God had taken from the man made he a woman, and brought her unto the man. And the man said, This is now bone of my bones, and flesh of my flesh; she shall be called woman, because she was taken out of man. Therefore shall a man leave his father and his mother, and shall cleave unto his wife; and they shall be one flesh." (Gen. ii:21-24.)

From this account it is evident that man and woman are of the same nature, constituting one race, but differing in sex, and in those peculiarities which belong to sex. They are companions and complements of each other. Having the same nature, they have many faculties and characteristics in common; differing in sex, they have corresponding differences in physical, mental and moral endowment. Generally, women are smaller and weaker than men; the female organism is more delicate and sensitive than the male organism. For this reason, woman is less able than man to endure the strain of public life, and to bear the excitement incident to large assemblies. Physically, man is stronger and hardier, and woman "the weaker vessel." Hence, woman needs protection, and man is the protector.

Intellectually, the sexes may be considered equal, and yet they are not entirely the same. Among men, as a rule, the intellectual, among women the emotional, predominates.

Hence, in matters that require cool, critical, impartial judgment, men are better fitted to act than women; in matters that call out the sympathies of humanity, women are better qualified than men. Men are more competent than women to wear the judicial ermine; women are better than men to minister to the sick and suffering.

“O, woman! in our hours of ease
Uncertain, coy, and hard to please,
And variable as the shade
By the light, quivering aspen made;
When pain and anguish wring the brow,
A ministering angel thou!”

Socially, man and woman are equal. Heathenism degrades woman to a position of slavery; Christianity elevates her to her rightful place—that of equality with man. It is with reference to social position and privileges that Paul says, “There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female, for ye are all one in Christ Jesus.” (Gal. iii:28.) In Christ all occupy a position of equality as members of the family of God. Although equal in rank, in the social realm woman's powers are superior to man's. She is the center and charm of society; this is her recognized place and sphere, and here her powers shine most brilliantly.

Morally, woman is more susceptible than man. She can rise to greater heights of refinement and purity, and sink to lower depths of depravity and wickedness. Says Macaulay: “History proves that although woman, swayed by lofty impulses, approaches the angels, yet when yielding to a master passion, she is capable of a refinement of wickedness which men never attain.” Woman can be a Sarah, a Hannah, an Elizabeth, or a Mary; she can also be a Delilah, a Jezebel, an Athaliah, or a Herodias.

Woman is naturally more religious than man, owing to the predominance of the emotional in her nature. This accounts, in part, for the fact that the majority of church members are women. Woman possesses the spirit of reverence, devotion and worship to a greater extent than man.

In matters of authority and government, woman is to be in subjection to man. This does not imply inferiority of nature, but is necessary to order and good government. God said to Eve: "Thy desire shall be to thy husband, and he shall rule over thee." (Gen. iii:16.) This does not teach that the rule of the husband should be arbitrary, unjust or tyrannical, but it does teach that it is the husband's province to rule, and the wife's to be in subjection. Abraham ruled righteously over his household, and his wife Sarah obeyed him, "calling him lord." The apostle Peter calls wives who are in subjection to their own husbands "Sarah's children."

Says Paul: "The head of every man is Christ, and the head of the woman is the man, and the head of Christ is God." Man "is the image and glory of God, but the woman is the glory of the man. For the man is not of the woman, but the woman of the man; neither was the man created for the woman, but the woman for the man; for this cause ought the woman to have a sign of authority on her head because of the angels. Howbeit neither is the woman without the man, nor the man without the woman in the Lord. For as the woman is of the man, so is the man also by the woman, but all things are of God." (I Cor. xi:3, 7, 12).

Paul says again: "Wives, be in subjection unto your own husbands, as unto the Lord. For the husband is the head of the wife, as Christ also is the head of the church, being himself the Saviour of the body. But as the church is subject to Christ, so let the wives also be to their husbands in everything. Husbands, love your wives, even as Christ also loved the church, and gave himself up for it." "Nevertheless, do ye also severally love each one his own wife even as himself, and let the wife see that she fear her husband." (Eph. v:22, 25, 33.)

Evidently these passages from the writings of Peter and Paul teach that the husband is superior in authority, and that the wife should be in subjection to her husband. The husband should love his wife even as himself, and the wife should reverence and obey her husband. This teaching is neither antiquated nor abrogated, as some would have it, but is a part of the law of Christ, and will continue in force to the end of time. It is applicable to this age, and is as much needed now as it ever was in the history of mankind. When it is observed in the spirit, as well as the letter, by both parties, it produces model husbands and wives, and makes happy homes. In harmony with this teaching, Paul instructs Timothy "not to permit a woman to teach, nor to have dominion over a man, but to be in quietness." (I Tim. ii:12.) It is necessary to the peace, good order, and welfare of church and society that woman's subordination to man shall be regarded and maintained.

This brief consideration of the relation of the sexes presents to us this picture of woman: That woman is physically inferior to man, intellectually his equal, socially his superior, morally more susceptible, and religiously more devotional; and while she is man's companion and equal, in point of authority she is subordinate to him. Her place in society and her sphere of activity should be in harmony with the qualities and peculiarities of her nature, and her work and responsibilities should be such as she is best fitted to fulfill within her proper position and relations. This indicates that her place and sphere are to be found in domestic and social life.

The view just presented is in accord with that of leading scholars and writers on this subject. In commenting on the Mosaic account of the creation of woman, after speaking of the dual sense of the word adam, Charles Louis Loos says: "The words of Jehovah declare unmistakably that in the general compass of human life, in all human experiences, woman stands and works as the indispensable complementary associate of man, according to the ability granted to her. Kant well expresses this when he says, 'Only man and woman together form the full and entire man; one sex completes the other.' The Bible doctrine of this dual nature of the adam, and the exposition here given of it, do not necessarily involve the identity of the two parts—the man and the woman—nor their equality in nature and in their relations to each other and to human life."

Says John Ruskin, in "Sesame and Lilies:" "We are foolish, and without excuse foolish, in speaking of the 'superiority' of one sex to the other, as if they could be compared in similar things. Each has what the other has not; each completes the other, and is completed by the other; they are in nothing alike, and the happiness and perfection of both depend on each asking and receiving from the other what the other only can give. Now their separate characters are briefly these: 'The man's power is active, progressive, defensive. He is eminently the doer, the creator, the discoverer, the defender. His intellect is for speculation and invention; his energy for adventure, for war, and for conquest, whenever war is just, wherever conquest necessary. But the woman's power is for rule, not for battle, and her intellect is not for invention or creation, but for sweet ordering, arrangement and decision.'

Says Harriet Beecher Stowe: "I would have it felt by those who are seeking to elevate woman, that the work is to be done, not so much by creating for her new spheres of action, as by elevating her conceptions of that domestic vocation to which God and nature have assigned her. It is all very well to open to her avenues of profit and advancement in the great outer world; but after all, to make and keep a home is, and ever must be, a woman's first glory, her highest aim. No work of art can compare with a perfect home; the training and guiding of a family must be recognized as the highest work a woman can perform; and female education ought to be conducted with special reference to this.

"Now women have a sphere and profession of their own—a profession for which they are fitted by physical organization, by their own instincts, and to which they are directed by the pointed and manifest finger of God—and that sphere is family life."

The relation of the sexes is beautifully expressed by Longfellow in the following lines from the "Song of Hiawatha":

"As unto the bow the cord is,
So unto the man is woman.
Though she bends him, she obeys him,
Though she draws him, yet she follows—
Useless each without the other."

The relation of the sexes, then, is that of companionship, in which each is the complement of the other; socially equal in rank, differing in powers and peculiarities, there are corresponding differences in activities and responsibilities. Equality in social position, or in intellectual ability, is not a warrant for identity in duties and activities. In this great busy world there is a division of labor according to the adaptation and qualifications of each class, and the same is true of the sexes. The relation of the sexes, and woman's proper position in society, must be duly considered in determining her sphere of work and responsibility. Distinctions based upon natural laws and conditions are as enduring as time, and cannot be ignored without destroying the very foundations of society. Woman's work and duties must be found in that which is appropriate to her sex, suited to her position in society, and consistent with her place as subordinate to man.

PART II.

II. What are the principles of the law of Christ which pertain to these offices which He has established in His church?

To answer properly this second question, the arrangements that Christ has made for the government of His kingdom or church must be kept in mind:

"And he gave some, to be apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints, unto the work of ministering, unto the building up of the body of Christ." (Eph. iv: 11, 12.)

"And God hath set some, in the church; first, apostles; secondly, prophets; thirdly, teachers; then miracles, then gifts of healings, helps, governments, divers kinds of tongues." (I Cor. xii:28.)

It has been shown that in the Kingdom of Christ the following order of officers is established:

- (1.) Apostles of Christ.
- (2.) Prophets.
- (3.) Evangelists.
- (4.) Pastors and teachers.

In the government of the church, then, Christ has placed these four classes of officers, and to them are committed the government and management of His church and its interests. The first of these, the apostles of Christ, are, under Christ the Head, the master builders or architects, who superintend the erection of the spiritual house, the church of Christ. They furnish in the name of Christ the plans and specifications for the spiritual temple, and give directions to the workmen who are engaged in its construction. All things are to be done according to the instructions of these architects, the inspired apostles of Christ. Although dead, and therefore not personally with us, their authoritative instructions are found in their writings in the New Testament Scriptures.

The prophets, next in order to the apostles, were inspired teachers in the church during its infancy, while the volume of revelation was yet incomplete.

They were assistants of the apostles in the guidance and training of the infant church. When the church had become fully developed, and revelation had been completed by the writings of the apostles, the order of prophets, being no longer needed, was discontinued. This leaves in the government of the church two classes of officers—evangelists and pastors. These constitute the living, earthly representatives and official executors of the government of the church of Christ. Let us ascertain the functions of these two classes of officers.

(1.) Evangelist. Philip, Timothy, Titus and others were evangelists in the primitive church. Timothy was solemnly enjoined by the apostle Paul “to do the work of an evangelist.” What is included in the office and work of an evangelist? Without attempting an exhaustive enumeration of duties, it will be sufficient to specify the more important. It is the duty of an evangelist to preach the Gospel and make Christians. This is signified by the meaning of the word evangelist. But this does not exhaust the duties of this office. It is the duty of an evangelist to gather together the disciples of a locality and organize a church. This involves instructing the members in their duties, in the nature of church organization, in the manner of procedure, in the qualifications of church officers, and instructing the officers in the duties devolving upon them respectively. In short, the whole care, guidance and training of infant and weak churches devolve upon the evangelist. It is the duty of an evangelist "to set in order the things that are wanting" in the churches that are under his jurisdiction, and bring them up to the standard of fully organized and efficient working churches. In a word, the evangelist is the field-officer of the church, who occupies the outposts, and goes out into new fields and destitute regions, making conquests for the Master, caring for weak and struggling congregations, and developing them into efficient, well-organized and self-supporting churches. Clearly, the office and work of an evangelist are of great importance, imposing grave responsibility, and requiring the exercise of much authority in the administration of the affairs of Christ's Kingdom.

(2.) Pastor. Pastor or shepherd, presbyter or elder, bishop or overseer, are all applied in the New Testament to the same officer; in their scriptural use they all refer to the eldership of the church. To them is committed the oversight of the church, the management and control of its interests, and they are to exercise a shepherd's watch-care over the spiritual flock. The duties of a pastor or elder are included in two general classes, viz.: teaching and ruling

(a) Teaching. The elders of a church are its official teachers. They are to feed the flock of God with the pure milk of the Word and the strong meat of Gospel truth. This work of teaching may be done publicly, in the meetings of the church, or privately, in house-to-house visitation among the members. It includes instruction, confutation, admonition and exhortation.

(b) Ruling. The elders of a church are its authorized rulers. Everything in the management and direction of the affairs of a church comes within their jurisdiction, and under their supervision. Christ, then, has established in the church two classes of permanent officers, to whom He has entrusted the direction and control of the interests of His kingdom on earth. The performance of the duties of these offices involves the exercise of important authority. The evangelist is "to speak and exhort and reprove with all authority" (Tit. ii:15), and elders that rule well are to be counted worthy of double honor. (I Tim. v:17.) To these officers are assigned important duties in the work of the Gospel, involving grave responsibilities, and conferring high authority. The evangelist is a general officer, going from place to place as his work requires; the pastor or elder is a local and permanent officer, doing his work in the community in which he lives. Their work is largely, though not wholly, the same, the work of evangelist being more comprehensive than that of pastor. Both, however, are charged with the work of directing and promoting the interests of the Kingdom of Christ.

III. We are now prepared to consider and answer the main question under consideration in this address. According to the scriptures, have women a right to be pastors and evangelists? May women be chosen to fill these important official positions in the church? May they be made the official teachers and rulers of the congregation? May they be appointed to go forth in the world, preach the Gospel, baptise converts, organize churches, educate the members and officers in their duties, set in order the things that are wanting in the churches—in a word, do the work of an evangelist? As the question is a double one, each part will be separately considered and answered.

(1.) May a woman be made a pastor, elder or bishop of a church? Let us examine the qualifications of a pastor or bishop and see whether a woman possesses the requisite qualifications. "The bishop must be without reproach." Many women there are who have this qualification. "The bishop must be the husband of one wife." Does a woman possess this qualification? Can a woman be the husband of one wife? A man can have a wife and be the husband of one wife, but a woman cannot. Does the fact begin to dawn upon your minds that pastors, elders or bishops must be men and not women? Is it not evident that the pastorate or eldership is restricted to men? If there is any meaning in Paul's language, if he spoke by the Spirit of God, the question is settled. A woman is not eligible to the pastorate or eldership of a church. By divine authority woman, on account of her sex, is debarred from being an official teacher and ruler in the church. The first and fundamental requisite for the eldership is that the person shall be a man. Not until the teaching of the Word of God is disregarded can a woman be made pastor of a church.

(2.) May a woman be made an evangelist and do the work of an evangelist? In answering this question your attention is invited to the following considerations:

(a) If a woman is not eligible to the eldership of the church, still less is she eligible to the office of evangelist, since, as we have seen, the latter office is more comprehensive and imposes greater responsibilities than the former. If, therefore, a woman is not permitted to be a pastor, still less is she permitted to be an evangelist.

(b) The Greek word euaggelistes, "evangelist," is masculine in gender. The feminine form, euaggelistria, "a female evangelist," is found in post-apostolic ecclesiastical literature, but it does not occur in the inspired writings. These facts restrict the office to men, and indicate that it is a departure from New Testament teaching for women to be evangelists.

(c) The evangelists of the New Testament period are all men. No woman filled the office of evangelist in the primitive church. There were "helpers in Christ Jesus," fellow-laborers with the apostles, both of men and women, but they were not evangelists. They did not fill the office or do the work of an evangelist. There are many kinds of workmen necessary in erecting a building, but they are not all of them architects, masons or carpenters. Some are painters, others plasterers, hod-carriers, teamsters, and helpers in other ways. So there are many workers in the church who are neither pastors nor evangelists. It is illogical to conclude that persons are evangelists because they labor in the Lord, unless it be shown that there is no other way of working in the Lord than by being an evangelist. Since, however, there are other ways of working, the conclusion that the fellow-workers whom Paul mentions are evangelists is wholly unwarranted. A candid and critical examination of the history of the primitive church necessitates the conclusion that there were no women evangelists in the days of the apostles.

(d) Preaching by women is a post-apostolic practice which exists chiefly among heretical and fanatical sects. The earliest account of preaching by women is in the beginning of the third century. In "Schaff-Herzog Encyclopædia," article "Preaching," the following statement is made: "Preaching by women was strongly forbidden in the Catholic Church, according to Paul's explicit direction, but was a feature with the heretics, and even with the Montanists, much to Tertullian's dislike."

In modern times, preaching by women is found in those sects which have erroneous views of the work of the Holy Spirit, as the Friends and Adventists, or which have defective views of the authority of the inspired writings, as the Unitarians. In one case, the practice is the result of fanatical delusion, the speakers professing to follow an inward illumination of the Spirit; in the other, it is the result of rationalistic presumption, the speakers boldly setting aside apostolic teaching by the dictates of their own reason. In neither case does the practice rest upon the teaching of the scriptures with reference to this subject. From all these considerations it necessarily follows that the scriptures do not authorize a woman to fill the office or do the work of an evangelist.

PART III.

Having seen that according to the scriptures women are not permitted to be pastors or evangelists, let us proceed a step further and inquire into the reason of this prohibition. If the scriptures gave no reason for it, we would still be compelled to accept the fact of prohibition and submit to it, walking, not by our own sight, but by faith in the superior wisdom of our divine Lord, by whose authority the prohibition was given. But since reasons are given in the scriptures for this prohibition, it is proper for us to ascertain what these reasons are for limiting woman's sphere of activity.

The reasons for these limitations are found in the following scriptures: "As in all the churches of the saints, let the women keep silence in the churches: for it is not permitted unto them .o speak; but let them be in subjection, as also saith the law. And if they would learn anything, let them ask their own husbands at home: for it is shameful for a woman to speak in the church." (I Cor. xiv:33-35.)

"Let a woman learn in quietness, with all subjection. But I permit not a woman to teach, nor to have dominion over a man, but to be in quietness; for Adam was first formed, then Eve; and Adam was not beguiled, but the woman being beguiled hath fallen into transgression." (I Tim. ii:11-14.)

Let us now carefully and candidly examine these passages, and ascertain what they teach upon the subject under consideration.

(1.) Paul does not permit a woman to teach or to speak in the churches. The church in Corinth had departed from the uniform usage in the primitive churches in permitting women to speak in the meetings of the church. In correcting this local disorder, Paul refers to principles of universal and perpetual obligation. The meaning of Paul's prohibition, in its permanent application, is to be determined by the general principles involved, and not by the disorder in Corinth. When Paul says, "It is shameful for a woman to speak in the church," he may refer to custom and prejudice of a temporary nature. But when he says, "Let them be in subjection, as also saith the law," he refers to something that is universally and perpetually binding. Paul's direction to Timothy, an evangelist, is not local or temporary, but general and permanent in its application. Paul's language in these two passages prohibits woman from being a public official teacher in the church. This much is certainly taught beyond question. While the language might be construed to mean more, it can not be understood to mean less, without explaining it away entirely. And in the light of what has already been considered, this appears to be the force of the apostle's language. Certainly the language cannot signify less than a prohibition of public instruction by women in the meetings of the church.

(2.) The reason for this prohibition is given: Women are commanded to be in subjection, and are not permitted to have dominion over men. Public instruction involves the exercise of authority, and in a mixed assembly, as in the general meetings of the church, this authority will be exercised over both men and women. Hence, for women to teach in the meetings of the whole congregation would be to exercise authority over men. But such exercise of authority is inconsistent with woman's position of subordination to man. Paul says, "For it is not permitted unto them to speak; but let them be in subjection, as also saith the law." "But I permit not a woman to teach, nor to have dominion over a man, but to be in quietness." The law requiring woman to be in subjection to man was given in Eden, and has been in force during all dispensations. This law is for all ages and nations. Woman is forbidden to do that which is a violation of this divine law. But it is a violation of this divine law of God for a woman to be a public teacher in the church. Therefore, since women are to be in subjection and not to exercise authority over men, they are not permitted to be public teachers.

(3.) The apostle gives also the reasons for woman's subordination to man. These are two in number. The reasons are: (a) "For Adam was first formed, then Eve;" and (b) "Adam was not beguiled, but the woman being beguiled hath fallen into transgression." Woman was created after man, from man, and for man; this is the first reason for her subjection to man. Woman was first in the transgression, being beguiled by the tempter through the greater susceptibility of her nature. This is the second reason for her subordination. These reasons are both of them stubborn facts, not changeable customs; they will always remain just as they have been during all these centuries; they are unaffected by the lapse of time or change of manners and customs. But these facts are the reasons given by Paul for woman's subordination to man. Therefore, the law requiring woman to be in subjection to man will never be changed; it will continue in force while the world stands. But this law subjecting woman to man is the reason for prohibiting woman from teaching in the church. This prohibition, then, does not rest on changeable custom, but on the inherent nature of the sexes and their proper relations to each other. Therefore, the law of Christ which prohibits women from being pastors or evangelists will remain in force as long as this world endures. This prohibition, based upon distinctions and relations which are inherent in the sexes, cannot be disregarded without violating a fundamental and universal law of God, which was given to regulate the relative position of the sexes.

The whole field of discussion having now been examined, the teaching of the scriptures upon this subject may be summed up, and embodied in the following proposition: In the kingdom of Christ, women are prohibited from filling official positions of superiority and authority over men, and are required to be in subjection to the divinely appointed rulers of the church as "helpers in Christ Jesus." God has placed in the church helps and governments. Women are permitted to be helpers, but are not permitted to be governors. They are hence prohibited from occupying those official positions which require the exercise of authority in the instruction and government of the church. It is for this reason that women are not included among apostles, evangelists or elders of the church. But within these limitations, and in subordination to the properly authorized rulers of the church, women may in many ways be "helpers in Christ Jesus," as were Priscilla, Phebe, Persis, Tryphena and Tryphosa in the time of the apostles. Subject to these limitations and the laws of expediency and love, women may do whatever they are capable of doing in Christian work the same as men. Within these limitations and under these laws, a woman may do anything that a man may do who is not a pastor or evangelist. The law of love requires that all things be done in peace and harmony, and to the edification of the church.

The law of expediency requires that propriety and adaptation be considered in the division of labor and assignment of work to different individuals, both male and female, and such arrangements made as will secure the best results for the cause of Christ. In obedience to these laws, women, as well as men, may sing, pray and talk in social meeting, teach in the Sunday-school, and work in temperance, benevolent and missionary work. Women may be deaconesses in the church, and render valuable service in various kinds of loving and helpful ministries. In work among the poor and neglected classes, among the degraded and outcast—especially of their own sex—in charitable work among the sick, suffering and dying in the hospitals, in zenana work and other ministrations in mission fields, there are activities where women can work more successfully than men. In these and other ways women may be “helpers in Christ Jesus,” and promote the cause of Christ by the use of the powers with which God has endowed them. They should have as much liberty in this respect as the law of Christ authorizes or permits, but no more. Wherein the law of Christ leaves them free, let them not be restricted, but let them use their freedom for the good of humanity and the glory of God.

But let them not presume to partake of the forbidden fruit of official authority in teaching God’s word and governing His church. Alas! too many men have made sad and disastrous failures in this matter. It will make matters still worse to disregard the Word of God and put women in the place of authority in the work of the church.

But the teaching of the scriptures on the subject of woman’s preaching has now been fully considered. The subject is one of great moment, affecting important interests in the kingdom of Christ. A law of God of universal and perpetual obligation, and the authority of Christ, the divine Head of the Church, are involved in this question. Let there be no trifling or presumption in a matter of so grave importance. Nadab and Abihu were destroyed by fire for offering strange fire before the Lord, which He had not commanded them. Uzzah perished for violating a law of God. Fifty thousand and seventy men of Bethshemesh were smitten by God for presumptuously and irreverently looking into the ark of the Lord. Korah, Dathan, Abiram and all their company perished, and Uzziah was smitten with leprosy, because they transgressed the law of God in presuming to offer incense, a duty which pertained only to the priests, the sons of Aaron. Set aside the law of Christ upon this subject, and the authority of Christ is overthrown in everything; the very foundations of our holy religion are destroyed. Beware of laying unauthorized hands upon sacred things and divine commands.

In pleading for the Bible, and the Bible alone, and in advocating a return to primitive Christianity in faith and practice, as it is taught in the New Testament, it behooves to manifest a profound reverence for the teaching of God's Word, and unswerving loyalty to Christ, the sole and supreme Lawgiver in His kingdom. In demanding a rejection of human authority in matters of religion, the Word of God should not be made void by our own traditions. The prohibitory as well as the preceptory commands of the Word of God should be observed.

At this point a clear discrimination between principles, precedents and examples found in the New Testament will be of service, not only because of its bearing upon the subject of woman's work, but also because of its importance in the discussion of subsequent chapters on church polity.

Paul calls the law of Moses a yoke of bondage; James speaks of the law of Christ as the perfect law of liberty. The former consists largely of specific commands; the latter of general principles. The one has many ceremonies; the other has precedents and examples to illustrate and enforce divine teaching. To apply properly the principles, and follow correctly the precedents and examples, of the law of Christ requires a right understanding of the principles of interpretation, an intelligent and careful study of the scriptures, and a judicious and conscientious application of their teaching in practice. It is easier to execute explicit commands than general instructions; the latter require critical discernment and wise discretion in execution. The law of Moses made definite requirements of tithes and offerings; the law of Christ requires us to present our bodies a living sacrifice, holy and acceptable unto God, assuring us that, if there is a readiness to will, we are accepted according to ability. When the law demands a definite amount, as one-tenth, or a specified offering every day, or at stated times, it is easy to understand our duty, but when it is expressed in the general terms of "according to ability," and "as he may prosper," it requires intelligent judgment, conscientiously exercised, and faithful performance to do our whole duty. The great danger is that, owing to inadequate conception or defective execution, we shall come far short of doing our duty as required by the law of Christ.

Sometimes divine law is embodied in approved precedent rather than express command. Something is done which receives divine sanction. In such case the divine approval has all the force of express command, and the approved action becomes a precedent to be followed as faithfully as commands should be obeyed. The authority for the observance of the first day of the week is of this nature. It rests upon approved precedent. On the same day that Jesus arose from the dead, the eleven assembled together, and Jesus met with them. On the next first day of the week Jesus met with His disciples. From that time the first day of the week has been observed as a day of rest and worship, being sanctioned at first by the presence of Jesus Himself, and afterward by the approval of His inspired apostles. Thus a divinely approved precedent has the same authority as an express command.

In some instances, the teaching of the law of Christ is contained in examples which illustrate principles of general application. These examples are similar in their use to examples in schools that are used by instructors to explain principles in the studies pursued. Suppose a teacher desires to explain the process of extracting the square root of a number. He takes an example, and goes through the process step by step, explaining each step as he proceeds. After the class has understood the example, the teacher unfolds the principles involved, which may be used in solving similar examples. Thus the pupils are led from the example up to the principle, and from the principle to the solution of other examples of the same kind. A similar method is employed in inculcating the principles of grammar, algebra, and other branches of knowledge. In like manner, the examples contained in the New Testament serve to illustrate and inculcate general principles, which can be applied to the varying phases of human action.

A good illustration of this is found in the thirteenth chapter of John. Jesus desired to teach His disciples an important lesson. They disputed among themselves as to which should be considered the greatest. Jesus sought to inculcate humility, and He did it in a very impressive manner. He washed His disciples' feet. This was an act of hospitality—a custom that was observed among the Jews since the days of Abraham. On receiving their guests, it was customary to remove their sandals and wash their feet, thus removing the dust that had accumulated during the journey thither. This service was usually performed by a servant, and if performed by the host was indicative of his humility. After Jesus had washed the feet of His disciples, He said to them: "Know ye what I have done to you? Ye call me Master and Lord: and ye say well, for so I am. If I then, the Lord and the Master, have washed your feet, ye also ought to wash one another's feet. For I have given you an example, that ye also should do as I have done to you." (Jno. xiii:12-15.)

Here, then, we have an example to inculcate a general principle. The general principle is expressed in these words: "Ye ought to wash one another's feet." The Saviour has here used the special language of His example to express the general principle. Putting the thought in general terms would give us this: "In humility ye ought to serve one another."

This general principle, deduced from this particular example of feet-washing, is applicable to all kinds of service, as well as the one illustrated by our Saviour's example. Jesus thus teaches the disciples the lesson that those are greatest who, in humility, render the greatest services. He then concludes the lesson with this grand truth: "If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them."

Another instance of teaching principle by example is found in Paul's and Peter's directions concerning salutation. Almost from time immemorial the kiss was the common mode of salutation among relatives and friends as a token of affection. The directions of Paul and Peter did not institute this method of greeting. They simply regulated the existing custom in accordance with the law of love. They enjoin that the salutation of Christians shall be holy—that is, chaste and sincere, an expression of real affection, and not feigned, or treacherous, as was the kiss of Judas. Paul says: "Let love be without hypocrisy;" so he says of the kiss, let it be holy, an expression of genuine love one for another. This principle of a true, holy salutation, that in the New Testament is applied to the kiss, is applicable to all salutations among Christians, whatever may be the mode.

Another illustration of inculcating general principles by a particular example is afforded by the case of women's speaking in the church in Corinth. Paul condemns this disorderly conduct on the part of these women, and, in correcting it, presents principles that apply to the case under consideration. Now while the disorder in the Corinthian church was local and temporary, the principles to which Paul refers in correcting it are not local or temporary; they are of universal and perpetual obligation, and apply to all cases that arise in the history of the church involving these principles. The particular examples may vary very much from time to time, but the principles are unchanging; like their Author, they are the same yesterday, to-day and forever. The principles involved in women's speaking in the church apply to "all the churches of the saints," and are for all time.

The case of the incestuous person in the Corinthian church is a further illustration of this method of teaching principles by example. Paul instructs the church in the course to be pursued in dealing with this wicked person. In doing so, he teaches the principles of church discipline which apply to all similar cases, and which are to be used at the present time in dealing with persons who are unworthy of the fellowship of the church.

These illustrations are sufficient to bring out the principle of interpretation which applies to instances of teaching principles by examples. That principle is this: From a careful study of the particular example, ascertain the general principle inculcated; this general principle is of permanent obligation, and is applicable to all similar cases.

This process of generalization and application of scripture teaching to conduct at the present time is of very frequent use in the study of the scriptures to obtain a knowledge of our duty. Intelligently and judiciously exercised, it may be employed profitably in learning lessons from events and instances which occurred under previous dispensations; "for whatsoever things were written aforetime were written for our learning, that through patience and through comfort of the scriptures we might have hope." (Rom. xv:4.) And it is almost constantly employed in applying the teaching of the law of Christ to the Christian life. Of course, care should be taken that there be correct generalization and right application of the examples given in scripture, and that evasion or perversion of Bible teaching be avoided. We should be honest, conscientious, and scrupulously accurate, "rightly dividing the word of truth." Thus we should study to show ourselves approved unto God; so shall we be workmen that need not be ashamed. We should seek to ascertain the exact meaning of the Holy Scriptures, and should accept whatever they teach, when rightly interpreted. Professor March has well said: "Truth is not conquered; it is read. It comes to earnest, humble seekers." All should be diligent seekers after the truth which God has revealed in His holy word. "Receive with meekness the implanted word, which is able to save your souls. But be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only, deluding your own selves."

CHAPTER VII.

THE RULE OF DISCIPLINE.

The value of the New Testament as a book of discipline is not duly appreciated in the churches of Christ. The famous declaration of Chillingworth, "The Bible, the whole Bible, and nothing but the Bible is the book for Protestants," is accepted in theory by all Protestant churches. It is denied in practice by those who adopt human creeds and books of discipline as authoritative, and bind them upon members as terms of fellowship. Those who accept it practically often fail in its application for want of a correct understanding of it. The two distinctive principles of Protestantism are as follows:

(1.) The Bible is the only rule of religious faith and practice, to the exclusion of all canons, decretals, traditions and philosophies.

(2.) Private judgment or interpretation is the right and duty of all.

The first of these cardinal principles affirms the all-and-alone sufficiency of the Word of God as a rule of faith and discipline. This frees Christians from all human authority in religion, and binds them by divine authority. It guarantees the fullest ecclesiastical liberty that can be enjoyed without repudiation of divine law and ordinances.

The second of these principles rescues men from the bondage of clerical interpretation, and fully recognizes man's personal responsibility to God. It does not concede any man's right to make special definitions of words to suit his preconceived notions, nor to frame rules of interpretation to torture meanings from passages in order to fit them to accepted theological theories or systems. It simply affirms the right of every man, without respect of persons, to candidly use his God-given faculties in the study of the Word of God, in the light of the best lexicons, grammars, histories and other helps that are available to him, in order to a correct knowledge of the revealed will of God. That will, thus learned, is the supreme law of every individual conscience. The New Testament is the last will of God concerning men, revealed through Jesus, the Son of God. While this endorses the authenticity and divine credibility of the Old Testament, it makes the New the only law of the Christian institution. It abolishes Jewish rites and ceremonies that were "a shadow of good things to come," and embodies the enduring principles of God's moral government, that are the same in all the ages.

The New Testament is, first, a rule of faith. It contains the subject matter of faith, and its explicit statements furnish the limit of it. The following proposition states an invaluable boundary of religious obligation:

"Nothing ought to be inculcated upon Christians as articles of faith, nor required of them as terms of communion, but what is expressly taught and enjoined upon them in the Word of God. Nor ought anything to be admitted as of divine obligation in their church constitution and managements, but what is expressly enjoined by the authority of our Lord Jesus Christ and His apostles upon the New Testament church, either in express terms or by approved precedent."

In the second place, the New Testament is the rule of practice. The term practice covers three distinct fields of activity, viz.:

- (1.) The deportment of members of the church.
- (2.) The ordinances of the Gospel and acts of worship.
- (3.) The discipline or government of the church.

Since the present purpose does not involve the consideration of the first two of these departments of practice, the word discipline is used as expressing the precise phase of practice under discussion.

The failure to understand, or to utilize, the apostles' teaching in this regard, and the many disorders resulting therefrom, have led some to seriously doubt its sufficiency to meet all cases that arise in the administration of ecclesiastical affairs.

Serious difficulties impair the usefulness of congregations, and are allowed to drag along for years without any recognized method of solving and ending them. Dissensions and alienations have neutralized much of the best work done, and the immense waste of means and energy has retarded the natural growth of the best of all religious movements.

Churches go into a decline and ultimately die with consumption one of another, because of sheer ignorance of the New Testament as a rule of discipline or a culpable disregard of it. This question should be thoroughly re-examined in the light of experience and of the Word of God, that the churches everywhere may know the all-sufficiency of the inspired Scriptures, and how to use them to secure the ends of justice among Christians, and to promote the peaceful operation of local congregations and the harmonious co-operation of "sister churches."

A full discussion of the question under consideration includes three subordinate inquiries, viz.:

- (1.) What is meant by the term discipline?
- (2.) What instruction is contained in the New Testament concerning it?
- (3.) Is this instruction sufficient to cover and rightly dispose of all cases of discipline that can arise in the administration of the church?

Discipline, though familiar in name, is neither well nor correctly understood. This is true not only of the large majority of private members, but also of many preachers and church officers.

Defective views are held as to what it means and involves, as to its obligations and necessity, as to its objects or purposes, and as to the manner and means of administering discipline. It is the purpose here to set forth a somewhat full and comprehensive view of the whole subject, considering its meaning, obligation, design, and manner and means of its administration. The subject is one of vital importance to the welfare and prosperity of churches, and to the success of the cause of Christ. The desire, purpose and delight of every true Christian is to learn and to obey the commands of our Lord Jesus Christ.

The cadets in West Point military academy are (1) instructed in army tactics, and (2) drilled in the manual of arms, marching, and other exercises and evolutions pertaining to military life. In schools and colleges students acquire two things: (1) Information or knowledge; (2) Intellectual training or discipline. Here are two examples of discipline, one physical or military, the other mental or intellectual. In both we find that the ideas of instruction and training are included. The word also includes the idea of submission to wholesome rules and rightful authority, as when we speak of family discipline, school discipline, army discipline, etc. Webster defines discipline as follows: "1. The treatment suited to a disciple or learner; education; development of the faculties by instruction and exercise; training. 2. Training to act in accordance with established rules; accustoming to systematic and regular action; drill. 3. Subjection to rule; submissiveness to order and control; state of discipline. 4. Severe training, corrective of faults; instruction by means of misfortune, suffering, punishment, etc. 5. Correction; chastisement; punishment inflicted by way of correction and training. 6. (Eccl.) The enforcement of methods of correction against one guilty of ecclesiastical offenses; reformatory or penal action towards a church member."

From the above definitions it will be seen that the word discipline includes the ideas of instruction, education, training and correction; that even in its ecclesiastical sense it includes reformatory as well as penal action. The Greek word for discipline is paideia, from paideuo (from pais, a child), "to bring up, rear a child; to train and teach, educate; to chasten discipline." The noun paideia signifies the rearing or bringing up of a child; specially, its training and teaching, education; instruction; nurture, discipline, correction, chastisement. Thus the Greek word has about the same scope of meaning as the word discipline, its English equivalent. The Greek word occurs in Ephesians vi:4: "And ye fathers, provoke not your children to wrath; but bring them up in the nurture (Rotherham, "discipline;" R. V., "chastening"), and admonition of the Lord." The noun paideia is found four times, and the verb paideuo three times in Hebrews xii:5-11. In the authorized and revised versions the verb is rendered "chasten," and the noun "chastening," "chastisement." Rotherham translates the verb and the noun by the word "discipline." His translation of Hebrews xii:4-11 is as follows: "Not yet unto blood resisted ye, against sin waging a contest; and ye have quite forgotten the exhortation which, indeed, with you, as with sons, reasons,

'My son, be not slighting the Lord's discipline, Neither be fainting when by Him thou art reproved;
For whom the Lord loves He disciplines,
But scourges every son whom He welcomes home.'

"In order to discipline are ye enduring; as to sons God to you is conducting Himself; for who is a son whom a father is not submitting to discipline? But, if ye are without discipline, in which all have become partners—by consequence, bastards and not sons are ye. Furthermore, indeed, the fathers of our flesh we used to have as administrators of discipline, and we used to pay deference; shall we not much rather submit to the Father of our spirits and live? For they indeed, for a few days, according to that which seemed good to them, were administering discipline; but He, unto that which is profitable; to the end of our partaking of His holiness. But no discipline for the present, indeed, seems to be of joy, but of sorrow; afterwards, however, peaceful fruit of righteousness to those who thereby have been well trained is it yielding."

In this passage the meaning of discipline is clearly brought out as involving the ideas of training and correction.

The Hebrew word musar expresses the same idea. It is from yasar, signifying to bind, to tame; hence to correct, chastise, punish, instruct, admonish; hence musar signifies "(1) correction, chastisement, (2) learning, instruction, as the result of discipline." The verb expresses the correction or punishment of children, rendered chasten in Proverbs xiii:24 and xix:18. It also expresses God's chastisement of the Israelites in the wilderness, in Deuteronomy viii:5. The noun is used of the training or correction of children in Proverbs iii:11, 12; xxii:15; xxiii,13, and is rendered instruction in Proverbs i:2. It is also used to refer to the chastenings of Jehovah in Job v:17, and Psalms xciv:12.

From the definitions and citations which have been given, it is evident that the word discipline includes instruction, training, admonition and correction. Hence, church discipline properly includes the whole work of educating, training, admonishing and correcting the members of the church in "all things that pertain unto life and godliness," as well as the exclusion of members who are disorderly and refractory. Many persons think of discipline in the church as only the turning out of unworthy members. Now, while church discipline includes exclusion, when that is necessary, that is but a small part of the work involved, and that work is not to be done until the other parts of the work have been performed. The passages of scripture above cited show that discipline in the church involves such watch-care and training of the members as a parent should exercise over his children in "bringing them up in the discipline and admonition of the Lord," such training and chastening as God administers to His chosen people. The elders of the church, who are also overseers and pastors, are God's stewards over His house to care for, to watch over, and to train or discipline the members; and "they watch for their souls as they that must give account, that they may do it with joy and not with grief." This is what discipline means; and every minister or church officer upon whom devolves the care, training and management of a church should understand and realize the burden of responsibility that rests upon him in the discipline or training of the members in purity of life.

It is in this full and comprehensive sense that the subject will be considered and treated. There is needed a fuller and more accurate understanding of the subject in the fullness of its meaning and scope of its duties.

When offenses come, wise discipline first seeks to reform the offender by admonition, exhortation, reproof and rebuke. If these fail, it inflicts censure and penal action upon the offending member. In case of dispute as to the truth or falsity of an alleged offense against Christian law, or as to the just application of the law to a particular case, there must be an authorized court for the fair and final settlement of the issue before penal action is taken. All this implies a proper authority in the church through which the body acts in the enforcement of the law of Christ upon members. Hence church discipline covers the whole field of congregational efficiency, which includes (a) Scripturally qualified officers; (b) Faithful discharge of official duty; (c) Courts established by the law of Christ for the determination of disputes; (d) Infliction of legally prescribed penalties.

Having thus indicated its different sections sufficiently for the present purpose, we inquire what is the rule or divine law relating to them?

The first thing that is enjoined by the rule of discipline is the selection and proving and approving of properly qualified officers and teachers, men of exemplary character, of good reputation, and of ability to perform the duties of their public positions.

The requisite qualifications of evangelists, bishops and deacons are explicitly given in Paul's epistles to Timothy and Titus, in the First Epistle of Peter, and in the history of Acts of Apostles.

These are all the public functionaries that are permanent in the church to be found in the New Testament. The requirements as to moral character are the same in all official members, for the obvious reason that the choice of a person to fill any public position is an endorsement by the church of his Christian character, and his influence and efficiency depend upon his good character.

The specifications are both positive and negative, and need not be transcribed here. Every one familiar with the Holy Scriptures can readily find and group them. The rule of discipline excludes from official position in the church all persons who have not these qualifications in fair degree. The choosing of men for elders, deacons or evangelists who are not what the New Testament says these officers must be in every particular, or who are, in any particular, what Paul or Peter says they must not be, is a repudiation of the New Testament as a rule of discipline, in respect to the constituted authority of the church. In so doing the whole efficiency of the church is put in jeopardy.

It is sometimes urged that it is impossible to find men who have all these qualifications, and hence we must take the best we have. This is equivalent to saying that the New Testament is impracticable as a rule of discipline. Protestants cannot afford to make such an admission. It is to concede the necessity for some improvement upon the instructions of the Holy Spirit by a man-made book of discipline. This would be a surrender of the citadel. There is no such necessity. What a bishop or deacon must be in character, every Christian may be, and ought to be, and this rule excludes from these positions only such members of the church as have not attained in good degree to what they ought to be as followers of Christ. A company of disciples must therefore remain under the oversight and instruction of a competent evangelist until persons are trained for official duties who have the qualifications required by the rule of discipline.

The lamented O. A. Burgess said: "Perhaps one of the great, if not the greatest, hindrances to the cause of truth is that we have been trying to make Pauls and Peters out of unlettered, narrow-minded, money-loving men, under the pompous title of the eldership." A similar remark might be made concerning the diaconate, but it, being less prominent, has been less harmful through mistaken choice.

Disregard of New Testament teaching in the organization of local congregations is the tap root of most of the difficulties that have flourished like a green bay tree in the churches, and threatened their total destruction in many instances. A rigid application of the divine rule is the true remedy.

New Testament knowledge and New Testament religion are the potent remedies for all the evils that afflict our congregations. But in the absence of such religion, and in the disregard of such knowledge on the part of members as is sometimes evinced, what are the potent remedies for such evils?

Wise officers of the church, who invite the assistance of other brethren of known experience and ability in difficult cases, and who quietly and wisely come to a conclusion, will seldom, if ever, fail to redress just grievances and settle all differences satisfactorily. But what if there be unwise officers, who refuse the aid of a foreign committee of such brethren, but thrust their hasty decisions upon the congregation without any fair opportunity for objection, explanation or examination of new facts? Or what if there be unreasonable men, who will not heed wise counsel and kind admonition?

If the New Testament furnishes no rule to meet such cases of unwisdom, headiness or factious opposition, and relieve the churches of their direful results, it is not a sufficient rule of discipline. It must provide a remedy for all cases that arise in the administration of the law of Christ, or it is insufficient. It must furnish the method of a just settlement of all differences and dissensions among brethren, or fail to meet the necessities of the church. Jesus said: "Offenses must needs come," and proclaims a "woe unto that man by whom the offense cometh." The fact of offenses calls for a rule of discipline to deal with them.

The New Testament is a sufficient rule of discipline for the churches of Christ. The right understanding and wise use of it is the supreme demand of the present time. When understood and rightly applied, all acts of discipline should be respected by churches, preachers and editors. There will then be no chronic troubles to impair the usefulness of churches, nor unworthy preachers be received into the pulpits. If such disorders continue to disgrace the grandest cause that has ever claimed the attention of men, it is not because the Lord has not furnished a potent remedy, but His people have failed to comprehend and rightly apply the divine rule in the government of the church. In the further development of this phase of church polity, it will appear that this rule of discipline provides for a prompt and just disposition of all cases that arise in ecclesiastical administration, whether public or private, official or unofficial, misdemeanors.

Whereto we have already attained, let us walk by the same rule, let us mind the same thing, and if any be otherwise minded, let us hope that God will reveal even this unto them. (Phil. iii:15, 16.)

CHAPTER VIII.

CHURCH DISCIPLINE.

I. ITS OBLIGATION AND NECESSITY.

"The Christian congregation, like every other community, needs discipline for the sake of self-protection, in order to suppress or eliminate anything that might impair or destroy its life. But as the Christian congregation is a community of the faithful, the character of its discipline is purely spiritual." ("Schaff-Herzog Encyc.," Art. "Discipline.")

"The church, in common with all associations, if it has a right to exist at all, has an inherent right of self-protection against unreasonable and wicked men, who may seek to subvert its aims or destroy its peace. But there are not wanting very clear intimations in the New Testament of the right and duty of self-protection, and consequently of separation from injurious persons." (Isaac Errett, in "Christian Quarterly" for January, 1873, Art. "Excommunication.")

Society consists of individuals who are associated together by some common interest or for a common purpose. Where there is society, there must be government; where there is government, there must be law; where there is law, there must be penalty for its violation; when the law is violated, and the penalty incurred, the law must be enforced, and the penalty inflicted; otherwise, the law could not be enforced, the government could not be maintained, and society could not be protected. Non-enforcement of law results in anarchy, and anarchy is destructive of all order. This is true of all kinds of government, civil, parental, scholastical or ecclesiastical. What the administration of law is to society, what training is to the family, what school discipline is to a school, church discipline is to the church. Discipline is "the treatment suited to a disciple," and involves that instruction, training, admonition and correction that are necessary to the proper development of the powers and faculties of a disciple. Hence, church discipline is essential to the right development of disciples of Christ in Christian life and character. Church discipline is, therefore, necessary in order that the church may fulfill its mission among men. Without discipline in the church, confusion, disorder and anarchy hold sway, and the effect of preaching is greatly lessened—indeed, largely neutralized. Without discipline, the church fails to train its membership, and paralyzes its influence over the world.

The obligation to maintain discipline is fully taught in the scriptures. Notice what Paul says to Titus. (Tit. ii:11, 12.) The grace of God has appeared in the Gospel, and the result of its appearance is here said to be holy living, by denying ungodliness and worldly lusts and living soberly, righteously and godly. How is this done? The passage says it is done by "instructing us." This, however, does not express the full meaning of the original word. The Greek word is paideuo, "to bring up, rear a child; to train and teach, to educate, to discipline." The word is used in Acts xxii:3, where Paul is said to have been taught or "instructed according to the strict manner of the law of the fathers," i. e., he was trained or educated in the Jewish religion. In the passage in Titus, Rotherham renders the word "putting us under discipline." This expresses the thought. The church is a school, divinely established for the moral training of its members, in order to develop pure and holy lives. This is done not merely by instructing, but by disciplining us. Thus, the grace of God in the Gospel "puts us under discipline."

Paul says to Timothy, "All scripture is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness." (II Tim. iii:16.) Scripture is declared to be profitable for four things: (1.) Doctrine, i. e., instruction. (2.) Reproof, or, more properly, conviction. (3.) Correction, and (4.) Instruction in righteousness.

It is evident that the fourth word here means more than "instruction," for that idea is expressed by the first word.

The fourth word in the Greek is paideia, which signifies training or discipline. Hence, the scriptures are profitable to instruct those who are ignorant, to convince those who are in error, to correct those who are wrong, and to discipline Christians in righteousness.

Jesus sent his apostles forth with the commission (Matt. xxviii:18-20) that includes the whole of their work, and the entire work of the church. It includes the work to be done for the world, and the work to be done for the church. The commission naturally divides itself into two parts: (1.) The work of making Christians, by making disciples, baptizing them into the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit; and, (2.) The work of developing, educating, and training these Christians, by teaching them to observe all things that Christ commanded the apostles. The whole work of evangelization and Christianization is comprehended in the first part of the commission; and the whole work of teaching, educating and training Christians is comprehended in the second part of the commission. This second part is expressed in these words of Jesus: "Teaching them (the disciples) to observe all things whatsoever I commanded you." This involves two things: (1.) Teaching the disciples all that Christ commanded; and, (2.) Teaching them to observe all these commands. The latter is an immensely greater work than the former. It is an easy matter to teach Christ's commands; it is a far more difficult task to teach people to observe them. It is easy to teach a child what to do; it is much more difficult to train a child to do it. But the proper training of the child requires that it be taught obedience, even by punishment, if that be necessary. Now, as discipline is "the treatment suited to a disciple or learner," it is evident that the second part of the commission enjoins the whole work of discipline, the education and training of Christians in all things that pertain unto life and godliness. In harmony with this, Paul enjoins admonition of the disorderly, encouragement of the faint-hearted, support of the weak, long-suffering toward all, and, when the circumstances of the case render it necessary, exclusion from the church. (See I Thess. v:14; II Thess. iii:6; I Cor. v:3-13.) Paul not only forbids retaining the incestuous person in the fellowship of the church at Corinth, but he forbids us to retain such a one in the fellowship of the church now, and enumerates several classes that he includes in this prohibition, as fornicators, covetous persons, idolaters, revilers, drunkards, and extortioners. (I Cor. v:9-11.) When proper and wholesome discipline is exercised and maintained in the church all the time, as it should be, exclusion from the church will rarely be necessary. Yet it is sometimes necessary; and when necessary, it should be done without shrinking from its responsibility, and becoming unfaithful to Christ. It is inconsistent to insist upon the law of admission in the second chapter of Acts, and disregard the law of exclusion in Corinthians and Thessalonians. One is announced and enjoined "in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ" just as much as the other. "For whoever shall keep the whole law, and yet stumble in one point, he is become guilty of all." It is just as great a sin in the sight of God to be unfaithful to the law of discipline, as it is to be unfaithful to the law of admission into the church. It is just as reprehensible to be unfaithful to the second part of the commission as the first part. We must "not shrink from declaring the whole counsel of God," if we would be "pure from the blood of all men."

II. ITS DESIGN.

The next point to be considered concerning discipline in the church is its design, or the objects to be accomplished by it. The object which one has in view in any work or enterprise will have an influence upon his whole effort for the attainment of his object. Just so the objects to be secured by church discipline should influence and control the whole work of discipline. Everything that is done should be done in harmony with, and with a view to, the purposes of discipline. What, then, are these purposes? The design of church discipline is to accomplish three important objects or purposes. These will now be considered.

(1.) The first object is to maintain the honor and authority of Jesus Christ. The apostolic commission rests upon the universal and supreme authority of the exalted and coronated

Messiah. All authority in heaven and earth is given unto Him. He commissioned His apostles to make disciples, and to "teach them to observe" all His commands. We have seen that this involves the entire work of training or discipline. These apostles, who are representatives of Christ's authority, enjoin upon us the law of Christ that requires us to use all reasonable and proper efforts to reclaim those who go astray; and if all these efforts, faithfully made, prove unavailing, to exclude the disorderly and refractory from the church. (I Thess. v:14; II Tim. iv:2; II Thess. iii:6; I Cor. v:5-13.) This work of discipline, from first to last, is laid upon the church by Christ Himself, the Founder and Head of the church; hence, the honor and authority of Jesus Christ are at stake in this matter. To maintain the honor and authority of Christ among men, in the church and out of it, is one of the objects of discipline.

(2.) The second object is to preserve the purity of the church. The church should be kept pure, not absolutely, for that is impossible in this world, but relatively or comparatively pure.

The parable of the drag net, and the character of the work to be done in the church, forbid absolute purity. Church members are not persons who are absolutely holy or sinless, but persons who are "following after holiness," or "the sanctification without which no man shall see the Lord." (Heb. xii:14.) In "perfecting holiness in the fear of God," members may vary in degrees of perfection, depending upon the progress which they have made in godliness. But the church has a right to demand that its members shall be seeking after holiness, and shall be "striving to abstain from fleshly lusts which war against the soul." (I Pet. ii:11.) They should be actuated and controlled by holy aims, purposes and principles. Persons who are not seeking after holiness, who are not trying, at least, to live worthy of the Gospel of Christ, have no business in the church. Their presence in the church is a menace to its peace and prosperity, and destructive to its purity. To prevent them from using their influence to ruin others, and to preserve the purity of the church, such persons, if found in the church, must either be re-converted or excluded. Hence, we find such injunctions as the following: "Brethren, even if a man be overtaken in any trespass, ye who are spiritual restore such a one in a spirit of meekness; looking to thyself, lest thou also be tempted" (Gal. vi:1); and, "My brethren, if any among you do err from the truth, and one convert him, let him know that he who converted a sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death, and shall cover a multitude of sins." (Jas. v:19, 20.) If the efforts fail, the persons must be excluded from the church; else the church itself will become impure. Hence, Paul says concerning the exclusion of the incestuous persons and "such ones," "Know ye not that a little leaven leaveneth the whole lump? Purge out the old leaven, that ye may be a new lump, as ye are unleavened." (I Cor. v:6, 7.) Leaven is a symbol of corruption, or wickedness. As leaven, or yeast, works in the flour and imparts to each particle of the mass its own condition, so wicked or corrupt persons in the church bring those under their influence into the same state of wickedness with themselves. When the body is diseased, and gangrene commences, the member in which the gangrene is must be amputated, else the gangrene will spread and death ensue. So when there are those in the church whose "word will eat as doth a gangrene" (II Tim. ii:17, R. V.), they must be cut off from the church, otherwise their influence will spread through the church, and the death of the church will be the result. Therefore, discipline must be maintained in order to the health of the body of Christ, in order to preserve the purity of the church, so that it may be "a glorious church, not having spot or wrinkle, or any such thing, but that it should be holy and without blemish." (Eph. v:27.)

(3.) The third object of discipline is to save the members of the church.

"Jesus Christ came into the world to save sinners." The salvation of men is the object of the entire work of the church. The work of evangelization is to save those who are outside of the church by bringing them to and into Christ; the work of discipline is to save those who are in the church by building them up in Christ. [The whole work of training, admonishing and correcting church members is done with a view to their salvation; because there is a future and eternal salvation which Christians are to work out "with fear and trembling." This work involves the instruction of the ignorant, the conviction of those in error, the correction of wrong-doers, the re-conversion and restoration of transgressors, and their discipline in righteousness, and, in cases of wicked and disorderly persons, their exclusion from the church. Even exclusion, when necessary, is for the salvation of the transgressor. Notice what Paul says of the exclusion of the wicked man in the church at Corinth. He commands the Corinthians "to deliver such a one unto Satan for the destruction of the flesh, that the spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus." (I Cor. v:5.) Hence, even in the extreme measure of exclusion from the church, the object of discipline is the salvation, not only of the church, but of the transgressor himself. To save the erring, to deter faithful Christians from erring, to reclaim the wayward, and restore them to the good and right way, to guard the flock, and to keep the sheep and lambs from straying, to "discipline" Christians in righteousness "to the extent that, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, they should live soberly and righteously and godly in this present world," "having promise of the life which now is, and that which is to come,"—these are the purposes to be accomplished by the work of discipline in the church. To accomplish these, disciplinary measures are necessary, just as the administration of law is necessary to the welfare and protection of society, just as parental government and training are essential to the proper regulation of a family.

The design of church discipline, then, is to maintain the honor and authority of Christ, to preserve the purity of the church, and to save the members of the church by training them for the society of the pure and the blest, and for eternal life in the abodes which Christ is preparing in His Father's house. These are grand and important objects, worthy of our fervent prayers and earnest efforts for their accomplishment.

III. MANNER OF ADMINISTRATION.

Some one has truly said : "The manner of doing a thing has always a very large share in determining its effect." This is especially true of actions which exert an influence upon our fellow-men. Even animals are susceptible to the influence which proceeds from manner. The very same words spoken to a dog or a horse will attract or repel, according to the manner in which they are spoken. Just so the result of the work of discipline depends very much upon the manner in which it is conducted. Some suggestions are offered with reference to it. There is a right and wrong way to do everything, and it is important that discipline be exercised in the right way.

(1.) Discipline should be administered in a manner calculated to accomplish the object in view. In the case of a personal grievance (Matt. xviii:15,) the aggrieved party is to go privately to the wrong-doer to effect a reconciliation, or "to gain" the brother who has trespassed against him. Now, whether he will succeed or not depends greatly upon the manner in which he approaches him. If he manifests a conciliatory spirit himself, he will be likely to succeed; if he evinces a haughty, vindictive spirit, he will certainly fail. To succeed in his endeavor, the person aggrieved should approach the transgressor in the spirit of kindness and conciliation.

When "a man is overtaken in any trespass," "spiritual" persons are to "restore such a one in the spirit of meekness." The object is to "restore" the brother who has trespassed, and the manner of the spiritual persons, their bearing toward the erring brother, should be such as will tend to effect his restoration. Also, in James v:19, 20, the object is "to save a soul from death." To do this, it is necessary "to convert the sinner from the error of his way." This is a case of an "inside sinner," of a brother who "errs from the truth." In order to save him, therefore, it is necessary to go to him, and talk with him in such a manner as to "convert him." Hence, the reconciliation, restoration and salvation of the erring one should constantly be kept in view, and the manner of doing the work of discipline should be such as is calculated to accomplish these objects. Hasty and harsh measures should be avoided, because they are calculated to defeat these objects. "Let all things be done unto edifying," with a view "to edification and not to destruction;" with a view, "not to destroy men's lives, but to save them." (Luke ix:51-56).

(2.) Discipline should be exercised in the spirit of kindness and love. (See Rom. xiii:10; I Cor. xvi:14; Col. iii:12-14; Jno. xiii:34, 35; I Cor. xiii.) These and similar passages indicate the spirit and manner in which all disciplinary work should be conducted. Love is the universal law in the kingdom of Christ. We are nothing without love. Love is the greatest of the abiding forces in the church, because it crowns all, and controls everything. Where love reigns, there will be meekness, humility, compassion, forbearance and long-suffering; for "love vaunts not itself, suffers long and is kind." Hence, the spirit of kindness and love should prevail and control in all the administration of discipline.

(3.) Again, discipline should be administered according to the law of Christ. The order of procedure, the steps taken, should be in harmony with the principles and directions that are given in the New Testament with reference to this work. A failure in this respect will lead to awkward and unfortunate results. The directions given are given because they are proper, wise and right, and ought to be observed. In subsequent chapters some of these directions will be considered. The New Testament is our book of discipline, "and is profitable (a) for instruction, (b) for conviction, (c) for correction, (d) for discipline in righteousness." We do not need books of discipline other than the New Testament, but we do need to study the one we have that we "may be complete, furnished completely unto every good work;" and we need to use our book of discipline, and be guided by its directions, so making it, in deed and in truth, our rule of faith and practice.

(4.) Moreover, discipline should be maintained with firmness and faithfulness. No undue haste or severity should be manifested; neither should there be remissness and unfaithfulness in the matter. "He that ruleth let him do it with diligence." (Rom. xii:8.) Due diligence should be exercised in all things that pertain to the welfare, watch-care and management of the church. The principles of right and truth should be kindly, tenderly and lovingly exercised; it should nevertheless be done firmly and faithfully.

(5.) Furthermore, discipline should be maintained steadily and constantly. Sometimes churches suffer wanderers to go astray without any special effort to reclaim them, wrongs to go unrebuked and uncorrected, disorderly conduct of various kinds to pass unheeded, and even grievous offenses against society and the law of God to go unpunished, and all this for a series of years, until the membership feel little, if any, restraint from following after their inclinations and propensities. After a long period of such remissness it is a doubly difficult matter "to set in order the things that are wanting," (marg. left undone), and it is almost perilous to the church, and also to the preacher, to attempt to set things in order. It is difficult (a) because of the accumulation of cases of persons who are wayward and disorderly; (b) because of the disposition to remissness, which has been developed in the church by the long negligence. The whole church becomes leavened with the spirit of unfaithfulness and negligence. In such a state of affairs it is an exceedingly difficult, yea, an Herculean task, to put a church in efficient working order. Moreover, it is a task which requires years to accomplish successfully. The writer speaks from experience in this matter. Instead of this, there should be a uniform policy, steadily pursued, of caring for the flock and guarding the members from straying. Prevention is better than cure, and a wise and faithful oversight would prevent many of the evils that afflict a church through negligence. Far better it is to watch over the sheep, and especially the lambs of the flock, and keep them from straying, than to let them wander far away from the fold without attempting to bring them back. Far better is it to reclaim the wanderers when they begin to stray, than let them alone until all effort to reclaim them seems to be a thankless and hopeless undertaking. Hence, the work of discipline should be regularly, steadily and constantly carried on, as cases arise and circumstances require, in order to a healthy and prosperous condition of the church. The work of training and purifying should be going on all the time, rather than leave it undone until reproach comes upon the church too great to be longer borne. What would be thought of a housekeeper who allowed the dirt and filth to accumulate in the house until it was not only a stench to the nostrils, but a source of disease to the inmates?

(6.) Finally, discipline should be exercised with wisdom and discrimination. A physician once handed a prescription to a druggist to be filled. The druggist asked how he wished the prescription to be mixed. "With brains," responded the physician. Many things necessary to be done in church management are left to the judgment of the elder-ship. Specific directions cannot be given. They must be guided by general principles, and know how to adapt and apply these to specific cases. Hence, the necessity for elders to be possessed of sound judgment, which is one of their qualifications. They are to be "sober" (R. V., "sober-minded"), i. e., discreet, of sound judgment. Discipline should be wisely and judiciously exercised.

IV. MEANS OF ACCOMPLISHMENT.

Education is the development or unfolding of one's powers, like the unfolding of a bud into flower and fruit; it also includes the moderation of abnormal peculiarities, like the pruning of a vine to increase its fruitfulness. So Christian (church) discipline, or education, involves the unfolding and upbuilding of Christian character, and the curbing of improper tendencies and propensities, the denial of sinfulness and worldliness. Thus education, discipline, involves the work of expression and repression, the work of promoting the right and restraining the wrong. President Garfield once said :

"There are two classes of forces whose action and reaction determine the condition of a nation—the forces of repression and expression. The one acts from without, limits, curbs, restrains. The other acts from within, expands, enlarges, propels. Constitutional forms, statutory limitations, conservative customs, belong to the first. The free play of individual life, opinion and action belongs to the second. If these forces be happily balanced, if there be a wise conservation and correlation of both, a nation may enjoy the double blessing of progress and permanence."

The language of this extract applies to church life equally as well as to national life. Two classes of forces are necessary to the complete development of character,—one centrifugal, the other centripetal; one of expression, the other of repression. To carry forward the work either of expression or of repression alone would develop, in education, a one-sided culture; in religion, a one-sided character. These forces should be "happily balanced;" there should be "a wise conservation and correlation of both" in order to a right and symmetrical development of character and life. The means of discipline, therefore, should include both the forces of expression and also those of repression. What these means are will now be considered.

What means of discipline will be required in any particular instance depends upon the nature and gravity of the offense. At this point an opportunity is afforded for the exercise of sound judgment, practical wisdom, and ripe experience. It will not do to deal with all classes alike, because offenses are not all of equal gravity, and are not equally injurious either to the transgressor or to the church. Proper discrimination should be made both as to the character of the offenses, and the means employed in correcting them. All the means of growth in grace and godliness, such as the worship of the church, the work of the Sunday-school, Christian benevolence and activity of every kind, are means of discipline, or training in Christian life. But, besides these general means of discipline, a few of the leading, more important, and also more specific, means will be mentioned.

(1.) Public instruction and exhortation. An important part of the work of the commission is the last part, which requires us to teach the disciples to observe all the commands of Christ. In fulfilling this commission, a minister must devote much time to instructing the church in the precepts and principles of the law of Christ. Many of the sins committed are sins of ignorance, which cease to be committed when the members are rightly instructed. Hence, much pulpit effort is necessarily devoted to instructing members of the church in all Christian duties, and to exhorting them to "walk worthily of God, who called them into his own kingdom and glory."

(2.) Private instruction and exhortation. The apostles "taught publicly and from house to house." As opportunity offers, and circumstances require, the public teaching should be supplemented by private instruction, counsel and exhortation. This is an important and very efficient means of discipline, if wisely used. Frequently instruction and advice can be given in private interview more appropriately, with better effect, and more satisfactory results, than in public discourse. When the conduct and circumstances require it, this means of discipline should be employed.

(3.) Private rebuke or admonition. It is necessary sometimes to administer reproof, to rebuke as well as to exhort. We are taught to "admonish the disorderly." In many cases this admonition is best given privately. In mild or trivial offenses, to save the feelings of the guilty one, private admonition is preferable and most successful. It is not necessary or wise to parade every misdemeanor before the public gaze. Indeed, in some instances, such a course works real injury to the offender and to the cause of Christ. Proper regard for the feelings of the wayward, and for the interests of the cause of Christ, requires that in mild, or less serious cases, rebuke or admonition be privately administered.

(4.) Public censure. Sometimes, however, offenses are of so grave and injurious a nature, that the proper chastisement of the transgressor and the welfare of the church alike demand a public correction. Paul says, "Them that sin reprove in the sight of all, that the rest also may be in fear." (I Tim. v:20.) The connection in which this passage is found seems to refer this direction to reproving elders of the church. The same principle, however, applies to grave offenses committed by others, which seriously affect the peace, harmony and prosperity of the church. To save the church from reproach, to rescue the transgressor, and to restrain others, gross violations of the law of Christ require a public censure.

(5.) Social ostracism. Paul teaches us to avoid those who cause divisions (Rom. xvi:17); to turn away from those who have a form of godliness, but deny its power (II Tim. iii:1-8); and to avoid factious persons after the second admonition. (Tit. iii:10.) Here are certain evil and troublesome characters that are to be avoided; they are to be put under social bans, and made to feel in this way the censure of the church upon their course, if, perchance, it may result in their reformation. If it fails, a further step may become necessary.

(6.) Withdrawal of fellowship, or exclusion from the church. The work of the church is to save sinners—inside sinners as well as outside ones. We are to seek to "gain" and "restore" the brother who has trespassed, to convert the brother who "errs from the truth." If we are successful in our efforts, we "save souls from death." And if we, in the spirit of Christ, faithfully use the means of discipline which have been previously considered, the result will be that in most cases, the erring brother will be gained, restored and saved. Occasionally, however, our efforts will prove unsuccessful. Sometimes a backslider is found who has so entirely made a shipwreck of his faith that all efforts to reclaim him are unavailing. When, therefore, all other means of saving the transgressor have been earnestly and faithfully tried without avail, and the transgressor remains incorrigible, disregarding the laws of Christ and despising His authority, there remains but one thing more to be done, there is no alternative; the law of Christ, the purity of the church, and the good of the transgressor alike demand his exclusion from the church. This is required both by II Thessalonians, iii:6, and by the teaching of chapter fifth of First Corinthians. In I Corinthians v, Paul teaches that the authority of Christ, the purity of the church, and the salvation of the sinner, all require that such wicked persons should be put out of the fellowship of the church. In such cases, we cannot refuse to disfellowship the wicked persons without disloyalty to Christ. Let it be remembered, however, that this step is not enjoined, and is not to be taken, until all reasonable efforts for the restoration of the transgressor have been faithfully made and have failed. Then, as a last resort, as the only thing that remains to be tried, the law of Christ requires exclusion from the church.

These means of discipline, as cases arise and necessity requires, should be judiciously, lovingly and faithfully used. Perhaps it should be added, they should be impartially used. Says Paul to Timothy : "I charge thee in the sight of God and Christ Jesus and the elect angels, that thou observe these things without prejudice (marg. "preference"), doing nothing by partiality." (I Tim. v:21.) And James says : "The wisdom that is from above is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without partiality, and without hypocrisy." (Jas. iii:17.) Peace at the sacrifice of purity is purchased at too great a price; it cannot continue, and is pernicious in its effects. "Nothing is settled permanently until it is settled right;" and church officers, as far as possible, should so administer the affairs of the church that matters will be settled right in the first place and avoid more serious troubles afterward. While exercising their best judgment, they should act scrupulously and impartially in the administration of discipline.

V. TREATMENT OF OFFENSES.

"The object of church discipline is to prevent scandal, with a further view to retrieving the offender himself; and the only means which can be employed for this purpose is, properly speaking, exclusion, partial or total, from the community."

"Church discipline, though ever so necessary for the self-protection of the church, has its last and highest aim in the reconciliation of the offender; and in the spirit of love it must dictate its punishments." ("Schaff-Herzog Encyclopædia," Art. "Discipline.")

These are wholesome words. Well would it be if the sentiment of the above were always followed in the work of discipline! But while we may imperfectly judge as to what is best to be done at times, yet it will not do to hesitate and delay, and finally do nothing at all. It will not do to cloak, palliate or wink at sin in the church. A church cannot prosper that does this. Says Solomon, "He that covereth his transgressions shall not prosper; but whoso confesseth and forsaketh them shall obtain mercy." (Prov. xxviii:13.) This is true of a church as well as of an individual. The law of Moses says: "Thou shalt surely rebuke thy neighbor, and not bear sin because of him." (Lev. xix:17.) That is, if we do not reprove the sin of those who are associated with us, we bear sin ourselves. To the same effect are some expressions in the New Testament, such as the following: "Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them." (Eph. v:11.) "Lay hands hastily on no man, neither be partaker of other men's sins; keep thyself pure." (I Tim. v:22.) It is necessary that the church shall free itself of responsibility when its members transgress. Not until sins are repented of, confessed and redressed, is the mantle of charity—which "covers a multitude of sins"—to be thrown over them.

Offenses are divided into two classes:

(1.) Personal or private offenses.

(2.) General or public offenses.

The first includes sins or wrongs committed against individuals; the second includes sins against the church, and against the peace, good order and welfare of society. The distinction has reference more to the character of the offenses than to the manner of their treatment.

The scriptures which relate specially to the treatment of personal offenses are the following:

"If therefore thou art offering thy gift at the altar, and there rememberest that thy brother hath aught against thee, leave there thy gift before the altar, and go thy way; first be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift." (Matt. v:23, 24.)

"And if thy brother sin against thee, go show him his fault between thee and him alone; if he hear thee, thou hast gained thy brother. But if he hear thee not, take with thee one or two more, that at the mouth of two witnesses or three, every word may be established. And if he refuse to hear them, tell it unto the church; and if he refuse to hear the church also, let him be unto thee as the Gentile and the publican." (Matt. xviii:15-17.)

"Take heed to yourselves: If thy brother sin, rebuke him; and if he repent, forgive him. And if he sin against thee seven times in a day, and seven times turn again to thee, saying, I repent, thou shalt forgive him." (Luke xvii:3, 4. See also Matthew xviii:21-35.) These scriptures enjoin certain duties upon the wrong-doer and the wrong-sufferer.

(1.) The wrong-doer. In the first passage above quoted, Jesus makes it the duty of the wrong-doer to be reconciled to his brother. He must not be "angry with his brother." (See Matt. v:22, where "without a cause" is omitted in the Revised Version.) And Jesus makes reconciliation the first duty of the wrong-doer. If he is engaged in the worship of God, and remembers that he has wronged his brother, he is to go at once to his brother and be reconciled to him. Then he can return and worship God acceptably. In the spirit of reconciliation he is to go, and he is to do his part toward effecting a reconciliation with the brother that he has wronged, in order that his worship may be acceptable to God. "For he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, cannot love God, whom he hath not seen." (I John v:20.)

(2.) The wrong-sufferer. The other two passages above quoted point out the duty of the one who is wronged. He is to take steps to bring the wrong-doer to repentance, and if he succeeds he is to forgive him. He is thus to "gain his brother." The steps to be taken are: ---

First. To go alone to his brother and convince him of the wrong that he has done; if he succeeds in "gaining his brother," there the trouble ends.

Second. If the first step fails, then he is to go a second time, taking with him one or two other persons. The object again is to "gain the brother," or, if unsuccessful, to have these persons as witnesses to the fact of failure to obtain a settlement of the difficulty.

Third. If the second effort fails, then the person who is wronged is to present the case to the church, with the evidence of the persons who accompanied him. If this effects repentance and reconciliation, the case ends. But "if he refuse to hear the church also," the case ends so far as the injured party is concerned. It now becomes a sin against the church, and is, therefore, a public offense, to be treated by the church in the same way as other public offenses.

It should be carefully noted that if our Saviour's instructions in Matthew v:22, 23 and xviii:15-17 were carried out, the wrong-doer and the wronged would meet half-way. This is the way it should be. When the spirit of conciliation is found on both sides of a personal disagreement, there is little difficulty in effecting a settlement. It is only when one side manifests an unchristian spirit, and refuses to be guided by the law of Christ, that there is any serious difficulty in reconciling parties at variance.

The same principles that are involved in the treatment of personal offenses apply also to the management of public offenses. This is evident from Galatians vi:1; James v:19, 20; I Thessalonians v:14, and II Timothy ii:24-26. A violation of the law of Christ is a sin against Christ; and as the church with her officers is the visible representative of Christ's authority, violations of Christ's laws are sins against the church. It is the duty of the church, then, as the injured party, to proceed with the wrong-doer as directed in Matthew xviii:15-17, and to follow the steps and directions there given in the treatment of transgressors.

This view is fully authorized upon general principles, and also by the relation which elders of the church, as shepherds, sustain to the flock over which they preside. It receives additional support, however, if we adopt a various reading of Matthew xviii:15, and Luke xvii:3. According to some manuscripts, the phrase "against thee" is wanting in these passages. The three oldest manuscripts,—namely, the Sinaitic, the Vatican, and the Alexandrine,—all omit "against thee" in Luke xvii:3, and it is omitted in the Revised Version. The Sinaitic and the Vatican manuscripts both omit this phrase in Matthew xviii:15. The Alexandrine manuscript fails to testify concerning this passage, inasmuch as the first twenty-four chapters of Matthew are wanting in this manuscript. As it omits the phrase in Luke xvii-3, it very likely would omit it also in Matthew, if this part of the text should be found. If, then, the phrase "against thee" is spurious, the instructions in Matthew xviii:15-17, and Luke xvii:3, are general, and apply to public as well as to personal offenses.

It is the duty of the church, then, in public offenses, under the direction and management of the elders, to go to the erring and endeavor to restore them after the manner indicated in Matthew xviii:15-17. The elders are not to do all of this work, but to superintend it, and do what they can of it. Those "who are spiritual" are to assist the officers in this work. Any member of the church who can do something, whose influence and efforts would be helpful, should render all the aid in his power. Oftentimes some private member will have more influence over a wayward one than the minister or any of the officers of the church. In that case, that private member is the one to go, and the one the officers should send, rather than send one of their own number. The elders should wisely direct the work, and the members should cheerfully and heartily co-operate with them in trying to save transgressors in the church. A sinner in the church has no more hope of salvation than one outside, unless he repents and receives forgiveness. Moreover, it is just as much our duty to try to save inside sinners as outside ones. There is just as much joy in the presence of the angels of God over the returning wanderer who has strayed from the fold, as over the prodigal who returns to the Father's house from the paths of sin. The work of the church is to save sinners, the erring within, as well as the lost without. Let the church, under the direction of its officers, with the co-operation of the members, endeavor to fulfill her mission in the world to the glory of God and the salvation of men.

VI. CAUSES OF NEGLECT.

In this chapter I desire to say some things with reference to the causes of neglect in matters of discipline. In doing so, I shall not undertake to say how general or prevalent these causes are, or what ones operate in any given region or locality, but simply note such as have come under my observation in the past few years, leaving each reader to determine in how far these causes exist and operate in his own church.

Having revised several church records in four different States, and knowing something of the general condition of the churches in several States, I think my induction of cases is sufficiently numerous and extended to warrant the statement that in most of the churches there is a large per cent. of merely nominal membership, probably one-fourth to one-third of the entire list of names on the church record. In some churches it will not, perhaps, reach twenty-five per cent., but in others it will come nearer to fifty per cent. of the membership. This nominal membership constitutes the chief hindrance to the prosperity of the church and the success of the Gospel. They are for the most part, dead-heads, and also dead-weights, "having a name to live, but are dead." The only sign of life that they ever exhibit is to oppose and hinder the church in its effort to maintain the authority of Christ, and to preserve the purity of the church. From such a discipline may the Lord deliver us! "They profess that they know God; but in works they deny him." (Tit. i:16.) "They have a form of godliness, but deny its power." (II Tim. iii:5.) This state of affairs is the result of a neglect of proper discipline in the church. The causes of this neglect will now be considered.

(1.) Incompetency of the eldership. By the term eldership, I mean those who have the oversight or management of the affairs of the church, including the elders, and also the ministers who have charge of the church. I shall not discuss the preacher's relation to the church farther than to say that a preacher who is located with a church, and doing the work (perhaps I ought to say occupying the position) of a pastor, is practically an elder of the church, whatever may be his relation, technically considered. The work of a pastor is the work of an elder, for pastor and elder are simply two names for the same church officer.

It is not often that men can be found in a congregation who are competent and fully qualified for the office of overseer of a church. This office is described by three words: Elder, because the person should have age, experience and wisdom; Overseer, because they are to superintend the affairs of a church; and Pastor, because they are to be shepherds to the flock, to take care of the sheep and lambs. Suitable men for this work are difficult to find. As a result, frequently unsuitable persons are chosen to the eldership, who are incompetent to do the work properly, and the work is either neglected, or improperly done, which is just as unfortunate for the church.

Again, sometimes the preacher of the church is a young man, who, though a good and worthy preacher, lacks that age and experience which will give him wisdom to do his work right. There seems to be a great demand for young preachers. Whether this is because the churches cannot support older men with sufficient salary, or they think that young men will please the people better, especially the young people, and draw larger audiences, I do not undertake to say; these, or perhaps other reasons, may have some influence in the selection of preachers. But it is unfortunate for a church to have a preacher too young to direct properly the necessary work of discipline. And it is doubly unfortunate if a church, besides having such a preacher, has not elders properly qualified to superintend this work. Right here we find one of the chief causes of neglect in church discipline. We ought to have a department in our colleges, or a class in our Bible Colleges, to educate and qualify men—preachers and others—for the eldership. And in training and preparing young men for the ministry, more attention should be given to instructing them in the administrative work of the church. They should be trained to be pastors as well as evangelists.

(2.) Unfaithfulness of the eldership. Sometimes elders are found who shrink from the duties and responsibilities which their position imposes upon them. They are willing enough to have the office of elder, and the honor, whatever that may be, but are unwilling to do the work of the office. "If a man seeketh the office of a bishop, he desireth a good work." If he does not desire the work, he should not seek the office. I do not think that this class of persons is numerous in the church, yet they are sometimes found in the eldership.

Occasionally, also, preachers are found who aspire to the position of pastor (which is the same as elder), and yet shrink from the duties and work of discipline which that position places upon them. They are disposed to put this work upon the other elders. "Their business," they say, "is to preach the Gospel; it is the business of the elders to attend to discipline." And so they refuse to have anything to do with discipline in the church. The consequence of this is easily seen. If the preacher, who is the leader in the work of the church, does not look after matters of discipline, the other elders will not be likely to attend to it, and it is generally neglected, greatly to the injury of the church. It is to be hoped that preachers of this class are few in number, and yet I have known preachers of some prominence who are reported to be of this kind. Let preachers not shrink from doing their whole duty as stewards over the house of God.

(3.) Unfaithfulness of churches to the work of discipline. Sometimes there has been for years so much negligence and slackness in regard to discipline in the church, that the nominal membership, already mentioned, constitutes a considerable part, perhaps the controlling part, of the church. In that case, the work of discipline is rendered exceedingly difficult, and yet it is none the less necessary. In such a case, the eldership, if faithful, are entitled to profound sympathy, and especially the preacher, for if he does his duty he is very likely to be sacrificed as a peace-offering to the worldly element in the church. It is quite rare for this element to predominate in a church, but there is enough of it in most of the churches to embarrass seriously the work of discipline.

(4.) Another cause of neglect is the frequent change of preachers. It has already been remarked that this work is not likely to be done unless the preacher takes the lead, and at least directs the work. This, however, he cannot well do until he is acquainted with the church, and this requires the principal part of a year's residence and labor with a church. Again, it is hardly to be expected that a preacher will do much of this work if he is shortly to leave and go to another field. Hence, frequent changes of preachers in a measure disqualify them for this work, and prevent them from attending to it as they should, and probably otherwise would, do. Changing preachers is a more serious matter, both to church and preacher, than many persons imagine.

(5.) Eagerness to secure additions on the part of the church or the preacher, or both, is another cause of neglect of discipline. It is feared that if discipline is faithfully exercised, it will keep persons from joining the church. It is true that there will be fewer additions, but the additions will be better ones. They will more than make up in quality what they lack in quantity, and this will be vastly better for the church. The veteran and venerable T. W. Caskey wrote several years ago: "I have been preaching in this State two months and a-half this trip—have not added many to the churches; I have not labored much in that direction. I find there has been too much exhortation, too little teaching, in the churches; too much of the emotional, not enough of the mental; too much effort at proselyting, not enough training; too much effort at getting, not enough at keeping. I have therefore directed my poor efforts to the development of the grand truths of our holy religion and the teaching of the churches. The evils with which our churches are afflicted, and especially in Texas, I presume will continue as long as the greatness of preachers is measured by the numbers added to the churches, and as long as churches seek that class alone to hold their protracted meetings." The state of affairs described in the above extract is unfortunately not restricted to either the time or the place at which it was written.

The "Baptist Union" some years since published the following concerning revivals: "We are profoundly convinced that if the churches would institute protracted meetings for their own spiritual good, and prosecute them thoroughly, a new era of Christian power would dawn upon us. The success of the meetings should be measured by results in the churches, rather than by immediate conversions; it should be the aim and desire not so much to make more Christians, as better ones; not to add to the members of the churches, but to their graces—their faith, love, holiness and spiritual power." These extracts, both of them, contain much truth worthy of careful reflection.

It may be said also, that the neglect of discipline keeps people from joining the church. This is certainly true to a considerable extent; and a pity it is that it is true. It is necessary that the line of demarkation between the church and the world be maintained and clearly marked. If the church does not guard and preserve this line, who will? Nothing pleases Satan more than to have the church come down to the level of the world, and have all distinctions between them obliterated. If the church suffers this to be done, who is to blame? Surely not the world!

Let the church fulfill her mission of saving sinners, preserve her purity, and maintain the authority of Christ. Let discipline be regularly, lovingly and faithfully exercised, remembering that no "discipline for the present, indeed, seems to be of joy, but of sorrow; afterwards, however, peaceful fruit of righteousness, to those who thereby have been well trained, is it yielding." In the restoration of primitive Christianity, we must do the whole work of the commission, the second part as well as the first; otherwise, it will be necessary for another religious movement to be inaugurated to reform the "Current Reformation."

VII. OBJECTIONS.

Having seen that discipline is "the treatment suited to a disciple," and that the law of Christ enjoins the obligation of maintaining discipline in the church, we come now to consider some objections that are made against it. It is not intended to exhaust the list of objections, but to notice the more important ones.

(1.) When church discipline is mentioned, the objection is frequently heard, "It will never do to enforce discipline; it will ruin the church." In reply to this, it may be said that if this is true the church is already ruined, and the sooner it is put out of the way of Gospel success the better. But I apprehend that this objection is rather a revelation of the objector's ignorance. This objection is evidently founded upon ignorance of what church discipline signifies and involves. As defined in the first chapter, it is necessary to the salvation not only of the members, but of the church itself, and many churches are sadly weakened and almost ruined for the want of it. All the churches need proper and wholesome discipline, and cannot prosper without it.

(2.) Again, when the work of discipline is suggested, the objection is sometimes urged, "If you maintain discipline, the people will join other churches," i. e., denominations. It will be observed that this objection does not deny that the law of Christ enjoins and requires discipline; it simply objects to having the law of Christ executed in this particular, lest the people join some other church. I have no doubt that this idea has done much to prevent its administration in the churches. Rightful and needful discipline has been neglected, and wayward members have been suffered to pursue their downward course unrebuked, for fear of losing them, or for fear that certain others would not join the church, but go to some other church. In this we see one of the sad and ruinous evils of divisions among professed Christians. But it should be said in reply to this objection that any person who would leave the church, or refuse to join it, on account of the proper exercise of needed discipline, would be an injury to the church if he were in it. The church is better off without such persons, and you are simply deluding them by retaining or receiving them through a false and unwarranted clemency. Besides, this matter is not within our discretion. It is simply a question of loyalty or disloyalty to Christ. Shall we object to the enforcement of the law of Christ? Shall we seriously consider whether Christ's authority shall be respected, and His commands obeyed, or not? Such an objection comes not from a faithful, loyal, loving heart.

(3.) It is sometimes objected that discipline will make trouble in the church and in families. Well, as we find the world, there is trouble in it now, and there is likely to be trouble in the future. No person can go through this world without trouble of some kind. And if you try to avoid trouble by neglecting your duty, you will be involved in greater trouble, either in this world or in the world to come. It is true that discipline should be rightfully and judiciously exercised; but this objection furnishes no reason why it should be abandoned altogether, for that would only increase the trouble tenfold.

(4.) The stereotyped objection, however, to discipline in the church is that the parable of the tares is opposed to it. The answer to this objection is twofold.

(a) This objection is based upon a misconception of the teaching of the parable. The lesson of the parable is not that there should be no discipline in the church, but that in human society (the world), the righteous and the wicked are to dwell together until the end of the world, and that the godly are not to persecute the ungodly, but leave them to Him who hath said, "Vengeance belongeth unto me. I will recompense." The parable of the tares forbids the persecution and enjoins the toleration of the wicked by Christians in this world. The parable has no direct reference to the question of church discipline. Several years ago, in answer to the query, "Does the parable of the tares refer to those in the church walking disorderly, or to worldings?" Isaac Errett wrote as follows:

"To the children of the wicked one, whether in the church or out of it. The field is the world. All the children of the wicked are in the world, so are the children of the kingdom. The parable was not intended to teach that the wicked were not to be cast out of the church, but that they were not to be cast out of the world. The righteous and the wicked are to be allowed to grow together in the field of the world until God's judgment sits; and Christians are not allowed to root them out."

J. W. McGarvey, in his "Commentary on Matthew," takes the same view. He says: "It is true that gathering out the tares at the end of the world implies that they will be allowed to grow until that time, but it implies nothing at all as to whether such of them as can be shall be excluded from the church."

LANGE, in his notes on this parable, says: "From this passage we learn that according to the ordinance of the Lord, the Old Testament punishment denounced upon false prophets and blasphemers does not apply to the new economy. It is contrary to the mind and will of Christ to pronounce a ban, in the sense of denouncing final judgment upon men by removing them and their errors from the church. This toleration must not, however, be regarded as implying that evil and sin are to escape all punishment in the church; it only implies that we are to remember and strictly to observe the distinction between the sowing and the reaping time. But within the limits here indicated, it is our duty to correct all current mistakes (Jas v:19), to refute every error and heresy (I Tim. iv:1-6), and either to remove from the church anti-Christian doctrine and practical offenses, with all who are chargeable therewith, or else to induce such persons to leave the church, by refusing to own and acknowledge them." (Matt. xviii:15; I Cor. v:2; Jno. v:10.)

In a foot-note, after correcting another error, Philip Schaff says, "On the other hand, however, this passage must not be abused and misunderstood, so as to sanction the Erastian latitudinarianism and to undermine discipline, which is elsewhere solemnly enjoined by Christ and the apostles, and is indispensable for the spiritual prosperity of the church." Even those who take a different view of the parable from the one above given admit that it does not forbid the exercise of proper discipline in the church. Archbishop Trench is probably the most distinguished of this class in our day. Concerning this parable he says: "But, assuredly, when Christ asserts that it is His purpose to make a complete and solemn separation at the end, He implicitly forbids,—not the exercise in the mean time of a godly discipline; not, where that has become necessary, absolute exclusion from church fellowship; but any attempts to anticipate the final irrevocable separation, of which He has reserved the execution to Himself.” (“Notes on the Parables,” p. 84.)

Robert Milligan, formerly President of the College of the Bible in Kentucky University, also held the same view as Archbishop Trench. And yet he speaks in unmistakable language of “the duty of the church to withdraw her fellowship from every member who persists in a disorderly course of conduct.” (See the “Scheme of Redemption,” pp. 529–532.)

From these citations it is evident that it is an egregious and mischievous error to suppose that the parable of the tares prohibits rightful and necessary discipline in the church.

(b) In further answer to this objection, it may be said that if Jesus in the parable of the tares forbids discipline in the church, then His own teaching contradicts the teaching of His inspired apostles. Not only so, but His teaching in this parable conflicts with His commission to the apostles, which, in the last part, enjoins discipline. Paul certainly did not understand that Christ in this parable or elsewhere prohibited church discipline, or he would not have enjoined it in his letters to the churches. In his farewell words to the elders of the church at Ephesus, in his letters to the Thessalonians, Galatians, Colossians, Corinthians, Timothy and Titus, there are numerous references to the work of discipline. Peter, James and John also refer to it in their letters. And when cases arise in which faithful discipline requires exclusion, or withdrawal of fellowship, Paul expressly commands it “in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ.” In other words, Paul simply represents Christ, and it is Christ’s own authority that requires this to be done. The apostles are commissioned to teach disciples all the commands of Christ. We learn, then, from these apostles what Christ has commanded; these apostles have enjoined discipline even to the exclusion of wicked and disorderly persons from the church. It follows, therefore, that Christ has commanded that such discipline should be exercised. There is nothing, then, in the parables or any other teaching of our Divine Lord that conflicts with the teaching of His inspired apostles; otherwise Christ would contradict Himself. Far safer is it to follow the authoritative declaration of our Saviour's commands which His chosen apostles have given us, than to "make the Word of God of none effect" by our erroneous interpretations. There is, then, no teaching in the Word of God that is opposed to wholesome and necessary discipline in the church. Discipline should be exercised with wisdom, love, forbearance and long-suffering; but, nevertheless, it should be exercised, and kindly, but firmly and faithfully, administered.

CHAPTER IX.

THE RIGHTS OF THE CONGREGATION.

The history of Puritanism is the account of a heroic struggle against "the superincumbent weight of an intolerable hierarchy" that crushed the liberties of primitive Christians. Romanism is a strong ecclesiasticism, which destroys all individualism in religion. Congregationalism exalts the individual to a degree that often destroys ecclesiastical efficiency. In the former, the centripetal forces are all-controlling. In the latter, the centrifugal forces constantly tend toward disintegration. The true and scriptural polity holds these opposing forces in harmonious equipoise, so as to afford the largest opportunity for individual growth without danger of reducing the body of believers to a religious rabble. An eminent thinker once said: "Congregationalism is good enough where church members are all saints, but it is not sufficient for the mixture of the good and the unsanctified that compose the church memberships in this world."

At bottom the question strikes the source of official power in the church. There are, in fact, but two views on this point. Episcopacy—Greek, Roman and Anglican—assumes that official authority arose at the beginning of the church on earth and flows down the centuries through a conduit of unbroken official succession, that is distinct from and above the congregations. Congregational and presbyterial polity assumes that official rights spring from the local congregations acting in their associate capacity under the instructions of the ever-living Head of the church, given through inspired apostles. Congregationalism is pure democracy in the local church, and recognizes no other authority. Presbyterial government is a representative democracy, and recognizes the right of the whole body to control each part in accordance with the revealed law of Christ. Calvin took the position that every church is a separate and independent body, invested with the power of legislation for itself. Both must recognize congregational rights, or logically drift into high episcopacy. A careful examination of the rights of congregations is fundamental in both forms of church polity. Methodist episcopacy is presbyterial in principle.

A local church of Christ is a company of believers in Jesus, the Christ, and the only begotten Son of God, who have covenanted together to meet in a given place for public worship on the Lord's Day, and at other times agreed upon, and to be governed in all things by the law of Christ.

Their congregational rights are based upon the equal birthrights of the individual members. All are upon the same plane of privilege, and enjoy a common fellowship. There is neither male nor female; all are one in Christ Jesus. The universal priesthood of believers is clearly taught in the New Testament, and was accepted by the religious reformation of the sixteenth century. This principle involves the right of every disciple of our Lord to participate, in an orderly way, in all congregational acts, whether of worship or business.

Speaking of Robert Browne, who in 1580 organized the first Congregational church since the days of the apostles, Dr. H. M. Dexter, in his "Hand-book of Congregationalism," says: "He believed that all church power resides in Christ, its rightful, absolute monarch. Democracy was not a thought of his time, and he was no democrat. Yet as he held that Christ reveals His will to, and by, each of His faithful ones,—ruling through each equally as His vicegerent—in point of practical working his absolute monarchy became indistinguishable from a pure democracy. The people governed as vicegerents of Christ; yet the people governed. A mutual covenant was the fundamental basis on which all rested. * * * Every such local church, self-complete and, under Christ, self-governed, was bound in equal sisterhood to every other church. It should give to and receive from them not only sympathy but help, as need might require. Such sympathy and help, on occasion, should manifest themselves in councils or synods for deciding or redressing of matters which cannot well be otherwise taken up."

Dr. Dexter formulates eleven propositions (page 4), which, he says, "are the fundamental principles of Congregationalism," and generalizes them in two germ elements of what he calls the polity of the New Testament, as follows:

"(1.) The independent self-completeness—often known as the autonomy—under Christ, of the local church.

"(2.) The equal sisterhood—which might in like manner be known as the adelphity—under Christ, of all such local churches." (Page 67.)

These are the germinal principles of church polity, and are held in common by presbyterial bodies—all who derive official rights from congregational action under the law of Christ. The members of such a local church have the right of choosing all necessary officers possessing the scriptural qualifications, and of deposing them, if they become disqualified for any reason, and of transacting all the appropriate business of a church.

There are some things that are not appropriate to bring before a congregation for its action. Such are matters of faith, piety and morality. These are subjects for public instruction, and all are alike bound by the law of Christ, which they have accepted as governing such matters. But discretionary matters may appropriately be referred to the congregation that has a right to decide upon them. Such questions of expediency can be rightly settled only by the concentrated wisdom of the church, whose enlightened judgment, fairly expressed in any practical manner, becomes the law to govern the body in such matters. There is a great variety of such questions that arise in the progress of any live church. Among these questions are: The hours of worship; the place of assembly; the building of a house, and the control of it; the call of a preacher; the election of officers or committees; the use of helps in the praise service, as a praise-book and other aids in promoting the best attainable singing in the congregation; the methods of accomplishing what the Gospel requires to be done, without prescribing the manner of doing it; and particularly anything that calls for an outlay of money for which members are expected to contribute. As bishops must be "not self-willed," nor "lords over God's heritage," they must respect the rights of the congregation in all such prudential arrangements. The will of the church duly declared concerning all these matters where Christ has left men free, is the law to rulers and members alike, to which all are required to submit as unto the Lord. "Submitting yourselves one to another in the fear of God." (Eph. v:21.)

"Likewise, ye younger, submit yourselves unto the elder. Yea, all of you be subject one to another, and be clothed with humility: for God resisteth the proud, and giveth grace to the humble." (I Pet. v: 5.)

It may be a question whether members of the church who have not reached their majority in age are entitled to a voice in public affairs. Where there is no civil statute that determines the qualifications of voters, it will seldom happen that any harm will come from the widest range of suffrage. On this point of order respecting decisions in the church, it will be of interest to quote the mature judgment of one of the clearest thinkers and writers of the present century. A. Campbell, in his famous essay on "Order," published in 1835, says:

"A question arises of some consequence—nay, of great consequence: On what occasions and for what purposes are Christians authorized to decide matters?

"They are not to pass on questions of faith, piety or morality. Truth is not to be settled by a vote, nor is any divine institution respecting the worship or morality of the Christian church to be decided by a majority. These are matters of revelation, of divine authority, and to be regulated by a "Thus saith the Lord," and not by a thus saith the majority. But in all matters not of faith, piety or morality, in all matters of expediency, there is no other way of deciding but by a vote of the brotherhood.

"There is no revelation that A, B or C shall be chosen elders or deacons; that D, E or F shall be sent on any special message; that the church shall meet in any given place at any given hour; or that this or that measure is to be adopted in reference to any particular duty arising out of the internal or external relations of the church.....

* * * * *

"A matter of greater importance occurs. Must the church be always unanimous before it acts upon any question of fact or expediency? While it is possible to be of one faith and of one hope, however desirable it may be, it is not to be expected that a congregation will always be of one mind in all questions of expediency which may occur in our earthly pilgrimage. * * * * *

"It is sometimes inexpedient for the majority to carry all in its power. There may be occasions when it is better for the majority to waive its privileges than to carry its point. * *

"The only question, then, is, whether it is most expedient and comely that the minority submit to the majority, or the majority to the minority; for one of them must yield. Unanimity very generally gives to the smallest minority the absolute control of the whole congregation. There can be no debate. The minority will, in the spirit of love and in the spirit of Christian modesty, agree to submit to a clear and decided majority." ("Millennial Harbinger," 1835, pp. 511 to 513.)

This is the only method of just recognition and exercise of congregational rights. And it should be noted that no question of conscience can arise in these matters of discretion that are within the field of congregational action. Conscience always respects principle or Christian law, and never enters the field of things expedient. The man who pleads conscience in this department mistakes stubbornness for conscientiousness. By his weak conscience he seeks to rule the whole church, and the weaker the conscience the more tyrannical the rule.

The leaders will have due care to see that all questions for congregational deliberation and decision are brought before the church at a proper time, in due form, and upon due notice. They will see that the subject in hand is clearly understood, and may endeavor to enlighten the members on the subject so they may act intelligently. They should not allow unfairness, electioneering, or any unworthy methods to be used, and should have due regard to the voice of age and experience. In this way, and by the exercise of a Christian spirit, the main desire will become practically unanimous, and the combined wisdom of the whole church will be in the ascendancy. Thus the apostles recognized the rights of the congregation in choosing its servants (Acts vi:1-6), in sending missionaries (Acts xi:22, xiii:1-3 and xiv:26, 27), and in choosing messengers to act for the church on occasion. (II Cor. viii:16-19, 23.)

In general, the rights of the congregation embrace everything that is not found in the express requirements, or contrary to the plain prohibition, of the word of God. All things that are lawful for men to do, i. e., that are morally right and will tend to edification, a congregation has a right to do under the supreme control of the law of love. Any infringement of this right of the local church is a violation of the law of Christ's kingdom that leads to division and to other evils. A slight deviation from the right line at this point may produce a wide schism in its divergent progress. Such is the sad history of sectism and its bitter fruits. The endeavor "to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace" demands faithful adherence to the will of the Lord so far as He has revealed His will, and the fullest maintenance of congregational rights in all things in which Christ has left men free.

The weakness of Congregationalism is found in the following proposition of Dr. H. M. Dexter: "Every such local body of covenanted believers is independent of any outward jurisdiction or control—whether from assumed vicegerents of Christ, or from other churches in any associate or individual capacity—being amenable directly and only to their great common Head." (Page 65.)

Each individual is as "amenable directly and only to the great common Head" as is "every such local church," and with equal propriety may claim to be "independent of any outward jurisdiction or control"—"whether from assumed vicegerents of Christ," or from a church "in any associate or individual capacity." Hence this "fundamental principle" destroys the one body of Christ, carves up the kingdom of God into numerous local democracies, which in turn crumble into their individual constituents. This is ecclesiastical anarchy. Every congregation is independent of all others, and every member is a law unto himself.

All that has saved Congregationalism from this result of its theory is the repudiation of this principle in its practice. The fellowship of the sisterhood of equal churches is held to "require that the advice and countenance of other churches be sought and gained by means of an ecclesiastical council, in ordinary cases of demand for it; such as when a church begins its organic life; when a preacher is to be settled or dismissed; and in extraordinary cases, when some trouble with which, unassisted, it feels itself incompetent to deal is perplexing a church."

Yet "the result of such a council is not in the nature of a judicial decision, but is simply friendly advice—having so much force as there may be force in the reason of it." This is about equivalent to saying that such a council will be useful where the young or troubled church acknowledges its weakness or incompetency and seeks advice that it gladly accepts. But in cases where no such weakness or incompetency is felt or conceded, such a council will be regarded as an impertinent interference. These are the very cases where its advice is most needed, but where it will be spurned.

In these instances congregational practice repudiates its theory. Dr. Dexter adds: "Yet should a church unreasonably refuse to follow advice thus tendered, and so be led into scandal, sister churches may purify their own fellowship, and bear testimony against disorder and sin, by suspending with regard to it their sisterly relation until the wrong be rectified."

This is unquestionably a correct and wholesome proceeding, but it is a clear abandonment of the theory of independency. It is an assertion of jurisdiction over the offending sister church by the ecclesiastical council, an acceptance of its findings as "a judicial decision"—a decision as to the unreasonableness of the refusal and the infliction of the extremest sentence that any ecclesiastical body can inflict, viz.: the suspension of sisterly relations.

All this is entirely scriptural, as will be shown in subsequent chapter, but it is not consistent with congregational polity. The strongest episcopal or presbyterial government can do no more.

But if a church calls a council and refers its troubles to it, as stated in the letter missive, it thereby obligates itself to accept the finding and advice. A refusal to do so is a breach of faith and of good fellowship. A congregation that unreasonably refuses to call a council in cases of scandal that involve the good name of sister churches, or that has damaged the relation of one or more of its members to other churches, thereby forfeits its rights; and sister churches have a right to decide upon the character of its refusal, and to hold the unreasonable church to proper accountability for the damage to the body with which it claims affiliation. The method of procedure in such cases is the distinguishing feature of presbyterial church polity. Under strictly congregational polity there is no means of redress in such cases. The New Testament must provide a remedy for them, or it is not a sufficient rule of discipline, and the church must supply the deficiency.

The limit of the rights of the congregation is well defined by President R. Milligan in his "Scheme of Redemption." He says: "In all purely local matters, such as pertain to their own order and discipline, the local congregations are independent of each other; and should ordinarily be allowed to manage their own affairs, according to the word of God, in whatever way they may think best.

"But in all matters of general interest, such as pertain to the increase, order, power, glory and efficiency of the whole body, these several congregations may and should co-operate, whenever by so doing they can better accomplish any of the great and benevolent objects for which the church was established on earth." (Page 407.)

Extraordinary instances, in which there is the right of interference to exercise a restraining power over a single congregation, are described by the same eminent author in the following paragraph: "Whenever," he says, "any one of them is in danger of being corrupted or destroyed by false teaching, maladministration, or any thing else, it is the imperative duty of other churches to interfere, in a prudent way, for its safety. This is plainly and positively required by the mutual relations that they all sustain to each other as members of the body of Christ." (Page 519.)

The oneness of the body of which Christ is the supreme Head is directly opposed to the absolute independency of the distinct congregations, and involves their interdependence, because of their common union with their acknowledged Head.

When Jesus said "upon this rock I will build my church," He did not mean a local church. The church of Christ is "the church of God, which he hath purchased with his own blood." It is the one holy catholic church, founded upon the rock of Peter's confession: "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." This one church is distributed into the local assemblies of disciples of Christ in the cities, provinces, states and countries throughout the world.

A. Campbell once said tersely and truly: "No community called a church is absolutely independent of the church of God, but amenable to the whole church for its administration of its affairs."

This accords with the apostolic presentation of the unity of the body of Christ, and enunciates a principle which points out the true remedy for the abuse of congregational rights. While it leaves local churches entirely free under the law of Christ's kingdom, it declares the accountability of congregations to the general body when, in disregard of that law, they bring dishonor upon sister churches and scandalize the cause of Christ.

The method by which they may be held to just accountability is a matter of great practical importance.

APPENDIX No. 1

by
R. MILLIGAN

CHAPTER IV.

ELDERS.

THE fourth class of ecclesiastical officers known in the New Testament are variously called Elders, Bishops, Overseers, Pastors or Shepherds, and Teachers.

Names given to the fourth class of Ecclesiastical Officers.

That these names are all used to designate the same class of officers will appear evident from a comparison and proper consideration of the following passages of Scripture:

I. Acts xx, 17, 28: "From Miletus he (Paul) sent to Ephesus, and called the ELDERS of the Church. And when they were come he said to them, . . . take heed to yourselves, and to all the flock over which the Holy Spirit has made you OVERSEERS, that you be SHEPHERDS to the Church of God which he has purchased with his own blood." Here the same persons who are called Elders in the seventeenth verse are called, also, Overseers in the twenty-eighth, and are, furthermore, exhorted to be Shepherds or Pastors to the flock.

Evidence that these all refer to the same class of Officers.

On this passage Dr. Bloomfield remarks as follows: "As these persons (the πρεσβύτεροι, Elders of the seventeenth verse) are, in verse twenty-eight, called ἐπίσκοποι, (Bishops or Overseers,) and especially from a comparison of other passages, (as 1 Tim. iii, Remarks of Dr. Bloomfield.

SCHEME OF REDEMPTION.

1,) the best Commentators, ancient and modern, have, with reason, inferred that the terms as yet denoted the same thing. 'Επίσκοπος might denote either an overlooker or a care-taker, and these senses would be very suitable to express the pastoral duties."

II. Titus i, 5-9: "I (Paul) left you (Titus) in Crete for this purpose, that you might set in order the things that are wanting, and ordain ELDERS in every city as I commanded you: if any one is blameless, the husband of one wife, if he has faithful children that are not accused of riotous living or disobedient. For a BISHOP must be blameless, as the steward of God; not self-willed, not passionate, not fond of wine, not quarrelsome, not one who makes money by base means; but hospitable, a lover of goodness, sober-minded, just, holy, temperate, holding fast the sure word as it is taught, that he may be able, by sound teaching, both to exhort and to convince the opposers." It is evidently Paul's intention, in this passage, to use the words elder and bishop interchangeably, and, furthermore, to indicate that every Elder or Bishop is an ordained Teacher of the Gospel; at least, he must be able, by sound teaching, both to exhort and to convince the gainsayers.

III. 1 Peter v, 1-4: "The ELDERS that are among you I exhort, who am a FELLOW-ELDER, (συμπρεσβύτερος,) and a witness of the sufferings of Christ and a sharer in the glory that is to be revealed, act as SHEPHERDS of the flock of God which is among you, taking the oversight, (ἐπισκοποῦντες,) not by compulsion, but willingly; not for the sake of sordid gain, but from readiness of mind: neither as being lords over God's possessions, but being examples (τύποι) to the flock. And when the CHIEF SHEPHERD shall appear, you will receive the crown of glory that fades not away." Here again the Elders are exhorted to be shepherds to the flock of God, and to take the Episcopacy or oversight of it willingly. And hence it is evident that, in the estimation of both Paul and Peter, the Elders and Bishops were officers of the same rank and order, and that they were severally to be both Teachers and Shepherds of the flock.*

ELDERS.

* Some of my readers may be anxious to know how it came to pass that even in the generation next after the apostolic age Bishops and Elders were in many cases regarded and spoken of as two separate and distinct orders of Church officers. This question is well answered in the main by Bishop Stillingfleet, as follows: "After this, when the Apostles were taken out of the way, who kept the main power in their own hands of ruling the several Presbyteries, or delegated some to do it, (who had the main hand in planting Churches with the Apostles, and thence are called in Scripture sometimes fellow-laborers in the Lord, and sometimes Evangelists, and by Theodoret Apostles, but of a second order,) after, I say, these were deceased and the main power left in the Presbyteries, the several Presbyteries enjoying an equal power among themselves, especially being many in one city, thereby great occasion was given to many schisms, partly by the bandying of the Presbyters one against another, partly by the sidings of the people with some against the rest, partly by the too common use of the power of ordinations in Presbyteries, by which they were more able to increase their own party by ordaining those who would join with them, and by this means to perpetuate schisms in the Church—upon this when the wiser and graver sort considered the abuses following the promiscuous use of this power of ordination, and withal having in their minds the excellent frame of the government of the Church under the Apostles and their deputies, and for preventing of future schisms and divisions among themselves, they unanimously agreed to choose one out of their number who was best qualified for the management of so great a trust, and to devolve the exercise of the power of ordination and jurisdiction to him; yet so as that he act nothing of importance without the consent and concurrence of the Presbyters, who were still to be as the common council of the Bishop. This I take to be the true and just account of the original Episcopacy in the primitive Church according to Jerome." Irenicum, p. 281.

Bishop Stillingfleet's account of the origin of Episcopacy.

This is rather too much of a per saltum operation. Episcopacy did not at once spring into perfect manhood from all the different Presbyteries of Christendom, like Minerva from the brain of Jupiter. It was one of the gradual but rapid developments of that "mystery of iniquity" which was at work even in the time of Paul. 2 Thess. ii, 7. But its growth was much retarded until the Apostles were taken out of the way. Then many a good

SCHEME OF REDEMPTION.

But why, it may be asked, should the same class of officers be designated by so many different appellations?

This question will be best answered by a careful examination of the origin and historical usage of these several titles. Let us then consider them briefly in order:

I. ELDER, (זקן; Gr., πρεσβύτερος,) as an official title, is of Hebrew or rather of patriarchal origin. Literally, it means an old man, or one who is older than another. But wisdom is to be acquired only by age and experience. And hence we find that the sentiment has prevailed in all ages and in all countries that Rulers, both civil and ecclesiastical, should be men of age and experience. The Greeks had their Γερουσία, (γέρων, an old man,) and their Πρεσβυία, (πρέσβυς, or πρεσβύτερος, an old man,) their Council and their Assembly composed of old men; the Romans had their Senatus as we have our Senate, (senex, an old man;) and the Israelites had their זקנים, or Courts and Councils, composed of men distinguished for their age, wisdom, and experience.

It does not follow, however, that every old man should be an elder in an official sense. Something more than mere age is necessary in our Rulers. They must have wisdom, and prudence, and moderation, without which age is really of no value. And hence it is, no doubt, that the age of eligibility to the office of Bishop and influential Bishop, who, by the suffrages of his fellow-presbyters, was made President of the Presbytery, or Primus inter pares, often did much unintentionally by his example to establish an order of Bishops, who in a short time were very generally regarded as superior to the Elders. But be it observed that even according to Jerome and Bishop Stillingfleet, Episcopacy originated after the death of the Apostles. It was, therefore, born out of due time, and has, of course, no place in the Sacred Canon.

ELDERS.

or Elder is no where defined in the New Testament. That man is old enough who has the wisdom that is profitable to direct in all things.

For the varied uses and applications of the word elder in an official sense, among the Hebrews, Egyptians, Moabites, Midianites, etc., see Genesis 1, 7; Exodus iii, 16, 18; iv, 29; xii, 21; xvii, 5, 6; xviii, 12; xix, 7; xxiv, 1, 9, 14; Leviticus iv, 15; ix, 1; Numbers xi, 16, 24, 25, 30; xvi, 25; xxii, 4, 7; Deut. v, 23; xix, 12; xxi, 2, 3, 4, 6, 19, 20; xxii, 15, 16, 17, 18; xxv, 7, 8, 9; xxvii, 1; xxix, 10; xxxi, 9, 28; Joshua vii, 6; viii, 10, 33; ix, 11; xx, 4; xxiii, 2; xxiv, 1, 31; Judges viii, 14, 16; xi, 5, 7, 8, 9, 11; xi, 16, etc. From such passages it is manifest that the official sense of the word elder is derived from the primitive or patriarchal form of government, under which every father was both a ruler and a priest.

References.

II. OVERSEER (ἐπίσκοπος) is of Greek origin. It is used by the classical writers to denote,

1. Any guardian or superintendent whatever.

Origin and meaning of the title Episcopus, or Overseer.

2. A municipal officer, or one who was appointed to oversee and take care of the interests of some particular town or district.

3. A viceroy, or magistrate, sent to superintend the affairs of conquered provinces.

It occurs but five times in the New Testament: viz., in Acts xx, 28; Phil. i, 1; 1 Tim. iii, 2; Titus i, 7; and 1 Peter ii, 25. From all of which it is obvious that in its technical and official sense, as used in the New Testament, it denotes simply an officer who has been appointed to oversee and superintend the interests of some particular congregation

SCHEME OF REDEMPTION.

III. The word bishop is but a corruption of the Greek ἐπίσκοπος. It was introduced into the English language through the medium of the Anglo-Saxon, and has, consequently, the same meaning as the word overseer.

IV. The word pastor is of Latin origin. It comes from the verb pasco, to feed, and corresponds with the Hebrew participle noun רֹעֶה, and the Greek ποιμήν, and the Anglo-Saxon sceap-herd, or shepherd.

The Hebrew word רֹעֶה occurs in the Old Testament 103 times, and is variously applied.

Its use in the Old Testament. 1. To keepers of sheep, as Abel, Genesis iv, 2; Abraham's and Lot's herdmen, Genesis xiii, 7, 8; the sons of Jacob, Genesis xlv, 32, etc.

2. To God himself. Genesis xlviii, 15; Psalm xxiii, 1; lxxx, 1.

3. To Christ. Ezekiel xxxiv, 23; xxxvii, 24; Zech. xiii, 7.

4. To Moses as the leader and keeper of Israel. Isaiah lxiii, 11.

5. To the Priests and Prophets of Israel. Jeremiah iii, 15; x, 21; xvii, 16; xxiii, 1, 2, 4; Ezek. xxxiv, 2, 5, 7, 8, 9, 10, etc.

6. To Cyrus as God's appointed guardian and shepherd of Israel. Isaiah xlv, 28.

7. To an intimate companion; one who eats and drinks with another. Prov. 13, 20; xxviii, 7; xxix, 3, etc.

The Greek word ποιμήν occurs in the New Testament 18 times, and is used to denote,

Its use in the New Testament. 1. Keepers of sheep. Matt. ix, 38; xxv 32; Luke ii, 8, 15, 18, 20, etc.

ELDERS.

2. Christ himself. John x, 11, 14, 16; Hebrews xiii, 20; 1 Peter ii, 25.

3. The Elders of the Church. Eph. iv, 11.

The verb ποιμαίνω, to be a shepherd to a flock, occurs eleven times in the New Testament. It is applied to Christ, Matt. ii, 6; Rev. xix, 15; to the Apostle Peter, John xxi, 16; to the Elders of the Church of Ephesus, Acts xx, 28; to the Elders of the Churches of Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia, and Bithynia, 1 Peter v, 2; to the finally victorious saints, Rev. ii, 27; and to Constantine as the ruler of the Roman empire, Rev. xii, 5.

Use of the Greek verb ποιμαίνω in the New Testament.

V. The name teacher (διδάσκαλος) is indicative of very high honor and authority. Christ himself is often called, by way of eminence, THE TEACHER, (ὁ διδάσκαλος;) and the same title is given to Nicodemus, John iii, 10. But in 1 Cor. xii, 28, and Eph. iv, 11, it is manifestly used to denote one of the leading functions of the Elder's office. Compare, also, 1 Tim. v, 17, and Titus i, 9.

Use and import of the word teacher in the New Testament.

The reader will now readily understand why it is that so many titles are used to designate the same class of officers in the Christian Church. They are called Elders on account of their superior age and implied wisdom and experience. They are called Bishops or Overseers, because it is their duty to watch over and superintend all that pertains to the edification and welfare of their respective congregations. They are called Pastors or Shepherds, because they are all required to have a shepherd's care over their several flocks: they are to watch for souls as those who must finally give an account to God. They are called Teachers, because it is a part of their duty to instruct all who are under their charge

Why so many terms are used to designate the same office.

SCHEME OF REDEMPTION.

From these premises, then, compared with sundry other portions of Scripture, it is obviously the duty of all Elders, Duties of the Elders.

I. To have a constant watch-care over their respective congregations. "Be shepherds to the Church of God, which he has purchased with his own blood," is one of the most solemn and impressive charges ever delivered to mortal man; and those who would meet it must do it in the spirit of their Master. If need be, they must, like him, lay down their lives for the sheep. They must not only see that all the public services of their congregations are duly and regularly attended to, but, like Paul, they must also go from house to house, pray with the sick, comfort those that mourn, strengthen the weak, instruct the ignorant, and see that all are living in the regular and habitual use and enjoyment of the various means which God has appointed and wisely ordained for our growth in grace and our progress in the Divine life; and especially must they see to it that every member of the Church is actively and earnestly engaged in doing what he can to promote the welfare and to increase the influence of the whole body. There should be no drones in the Kingdom of God. There is work provided for all. And he is not always the best Bishop who does most of the work himself, but who is most successful in persuading and encouraging others to work most.

II. They are the divinely appointed Teachers of all who are under their charge, not only in the congregation assembled for public worship, but also in the Sunday School, in the family, and in the social circle. And hence it is that every Elder must be "apt to teach." He must be able to hold forth the faithful word as he has been taught, so that by sound teaching he may both exhort and convict the gainsayers. True, indeed, it may not be necessary that he should at all times exercise his gifts as a teacher. When there is a plurality of Elders, as there should be in every congregation, only a portion of them may have to labor regularly and constantly in word and doctrine. 1 Timothy v, 17. But whenever it becomes necessary, he must be prepared to feed the flock with the sincere milk of the word, that they may grow thereby.

ELDERS.

III. To the Elders are also committed the discipline of their respective congregations. "Let the Elders that rule well be counted worthy of double honor." 1 Tim. v, 17. "Remember them who have the rule over you, who have spoken unto you the word of God." Heb. xiii, 7. "Obey them who have the rule over you, and submit yourselves; for they watch for your souls as those who must give an account." Hebrews xiii, 17. And again, Paul says to Timothy, "If a man know not how to rule his own house, how shall he take care of the Church of God?" 1 Tim. iii, 5. See also 1 Thess. v, 12. A Bishop, then, must be a ruler. Not indeed a lord over God's heritage; but as a wise, prudent, and benevolent parent admonishes, re-proves, rebukes, corrects, and chastens his own beloved children, so, in the spirit of Christ, must the Elders of every congregation admonish, reprove, and rebuke, without respect of persons, all transgressors under their charge. And if all means of reformation should fail, they must, with the concurrence of the congregation, "withdraw from every brother that walketh disorderly." 2 Thess. iii, 6. The Elders, then, of every congregation are its divinely appointed Shepherds, Teachers, and Rulers.*

* In this division of the Elder's office I do not aim so much at logical accuracy in the use of terms as I do at a clear and explicit statement of the duties involved; and especially at giving prominence to that watch-care which

SCHEME OF REDEMPTION.

In the discharge of these several duties much liberty is, of necessity, given to the Elders. Many questions will arise in the course of their administration which can be settled only by a wise, prudent, and judicious application of general principles. And hence the necessity that they should all be men of rare and superior qualifications. These are very clearly stated by Paul in his letters to Timothy and Titus. See 1 Timothy iii, 1-7, and Titus i, 5-9. We will notice very briefly those that are given in the Epistle to Timothy.

I. "A Bishop must be blameless" (ἀνεπίληπτος;) a man who gives his adversary no hold on him; against whom no evil charge can be sustained.

II. "The husband of one wife" (μιάς γυναικὸς ἄνθρωπος.) These words, considered abstractly, would seem to imply that either celibacy or polygamy disqualifies a man for the office of a Bishop. But there are some reasons which seem to imply that the latter only is intended. And,

1. Celibacy is not, in itself, an evil. In no part of the Bible is it so regarded, and at least two of the most eminent members of the primitive Church were unmarried men. Hence it is not probable that Paul would condemn in all others what he considered right in his own case. It is unreasonable to suppose that the chief of all the Apostles would lay down as a necessary qualification for inferior officers what is proved, by his own example, to be all will admit is a most important part of the shepherd's office, but which is, nevertheless, often practically neglected by many of our Elders. The shepherd's office, in its widest ecclesiastical and metaphorical sense, comprehends all the duties of an Elder, Acts xx, 28; and in Eph. iv, 11, it includes every thing but teaching. In this latter sense the word ruler is also frequently used in the New Testament. And hence it may ordinarily be best to include all the duties of the Elder's office under the two heads of teaching and ruling. This is clearly Paul's conception of the matter as expressed in Eph. iv, 11 and 1 Timothy v, 17.

ELDERS.

unnecessary for the superior, and which would, in fact, have rendered both himself and Barnabas ineligible to the Eldership or the Diaconate of any Christian congregation.

2. But polygamy is an evil. It is a violation of the implied will and purpose of God in man's creation. "In the beginning He made them a male and a female." Its tendency is also full of evil. It destroys or greatly weakens conjugal affection. It excites envy and jealousy where love and harmony should always reign. And hence its history is a melancholy illustration of the weakness and the follies of fallen human nature.

It is, therefore, probable that monogamy is here opposed only to polygamy, and that to free the Church, as far as possible, from this then prevalent evil was the benevolent object of the Apostle. On this subject Thomas Scott makes the following judicious remarks: "Christ and his Apostles," says he, "expressly condemned polygamy, as well as divorces, except for adultery. Yet there was no direct command for a man who had previously taken more wives than one to put the others away when he embraced the Gospel; such a requisition might, in some instances, have produced very bad consequences in domestic life, and increased the opposition of the civil powers to the preaching of Christianity. But the rule that no man, however qualified in other respects, should be admitted into the pastoral office who had more than one wife, or who had put away one and taken another, tended to show the unlawfulness of polygamy and divorces on frivolous pretenses, and their inconsistency with the Christian dispensation, and concurred, with other things, to bring them into total disuse in the Christian Church, yet without violence and confusion."

SCHEME OF REDEMPTION

III. "Vigilant" (νηφάλιος.) The Bishop must not go to sleep as a drunkard. He must be watchful with regard both to himself and the congregation.

IV. "Sober" (σώφρων.) He should be a man of a sound and well-balanced mind, possessing a large amount of good common-sense. This qualification will often be brought into requisition.

V. "Of good behavior" (χόσμιος.) He should be a man of good manners, chaste, courteous, and polite in his whole demeanor. A man of slovenly, rough, and boorish manners should never be made an Overseer of the Church of God.

VI. "Given to hospitality" (φιλόξενος.) He should be a lover of strangers; a man of the same spirit as the good Samaritan, always ready to pour into the wounds of bleeding and suffering humanity the oil and the wine of the Gospel, and especially to receive into his house and entertain any and every stranger that is in want.

VII. "Apt to teach" (διδασκτικός.) He should have an accurate and comprehensive knowledge of the whole Scheme of Redemption, and be able to communicate it to others. This is a necessary qualification of every Elder, Bishop, or Overseer. And hence an order of merely "Ruling Elders" is not an order of the Apostolic Church. Every Elder is officially a Teacher as well as a Ruler, and consequently he should always be well qualified for the full and faithful discharge of all the duties of this twofold office.

VIII. "Not given to wine" (μὴ πάροινος.) A Bishop should not indulge in the habit of drinking wine, or any other kind of intoxicating liquors. He should keep himself pure from the evil effects of this and every other species of intemperance.

ELDERS.

IX. "No striker" (μὴ πλῆκτης.) He must not be quarrelsome and pugnacious in a physical sense, but a peaceable man.

X. "Not greedy of filthy lucre" (μὴ αἰσχροκερδής.) He must not be a person who gains money by base and dishonorable means. This would exclude from the Eldership, for example, many who are now engaged in the traffic of ardent spirits.

XI. "Patient" (ἐπιεικής.) He should be distinguished for his general mildness and amiability of character; "in meekness instructing those who oppose themselves, if God peradventure will give them repentance to the acknowledging of the truth."

XII. "Not a brawler" (ἄμαχος.) He should not be disposed to fight, in a metaphysical sense. He should not be captious, not given to strife and debate, not too tenacious of his own rights; but quiet and peaceable, and, in the spirit of the great Apostle, while contending earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints, he should, as far as possible, accommodate himself to the prejudices of all, that he may gain the more.

XIII. "Not covetous" (ἀφιλάργυρος.) He should not be avaricious, not a lover of money; for "the love of money is a root of all evil."

XIV. "One that ruleth well his own house, having his children in subjection with all gravity." It is important, just here, to distinguish between that which is, in itself, a qualification, and that which is a mere proof of its existence. If the view which we have taken of the second qualification is correct, it does not follow that, in order to become a Bishop, a man must, of necessity, have a family. This test, as we have said, would have excluded Paul himself from the Eldership of a congregation in which, for three years, he had discharged with fidelity all the duties of an Overseer. But this much certainly does follow, that, if a man who is a candidate for the office of a Bishop has a family, it should be well governed; if he has children, then, indeed, they should be brought up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. The Bishops were chosen from among the old men, and, of course, they generally had families. And their qualifications for the instruction, care, and government of a congregation would be most apparent from the manner in which they had educated their own families. It was a maxim with Confucius, the great Chinese philosopher, that "He who knows not how to govern and reform his own family can not rightly govern and reform a people." And a greater than Confucius has said, "If a man know not how to rule his own house, how shall he take care of the Church of God?"

SCHEME OF REDEMPTION.

XV. "Not a novice" (μη νεόφυτος.) He must not be a neophyte—a new convert—"lest, being lifted up with pride, he fall into the same kind of condemnation as that into which the Devil fell."

XVI. "Moreover, he must have a good report of them that are without"—of them who are not Christians—"lest he fall into reproach and the snare of the Devil."

Such, then, are, in brief, the essential qualifications of every Christian Bishop, Elder, or Overseer. Those who do not possess them should beware that they touch not the ark of God.

The next point to be considered is the number of Bishops that should be appointed in each congregation. This will, of course, depend very much on the number of its members

The required number of Elders in every congregation.

ELDERS.

and the amount of labor to be performed.* In a congregation composed of but few members but few Elders are necessary. But in all cases it seems from the teachings of the New Testament that there should be at least a plurality of Elders in every Church. ^{Evidence of this.} This is clear from such passages as the following:

1. Acts xi, 29, 30: "Then the disciples, every man according to his ability, determined to send relief unto the brethren who dwelt in Judea. Which also they did, and sent it to the ELDERS by the hands of Barnabas and Saul."

2. Acts xiv, 23: "And when they had ordained them ELDERS in every Church, and had prayed with fasting, they commended them to the Lord, on whom they believed."

3. Acts xv, 4: "And when they (Paul and Barnabas) were come to Jerusalem, they were received by the Church and the Apostles and ELDERS; and they declared all that God had done with them." See, also, verses 22 and 23.

4. Acts xx, 17: "And from Miletus he (Paul) sent to Ephesus and called the ELDERS of the Church."

5. Philippians i, 1: "Paul and Timothy, the servants of Jesus Christ, to all the saints in Christ Jesus, who are at Philippi, with the BISHOPS and Deacons."

* In some of the primitive and post-apostolic Churches the number of members and officers was very great. In the Church of Rome, for instance, in A. D. 252, there were one Bishop, forty-six Presbyters, seven Deacons, (after the original model of the Jerusalem Church,) seven sub-Deacons, forty-two Acolyths, or attendants, and fifty-two Exorcists, Readers, and Janitors. But there were in the Church at the same time more than fifteen hundred widows and other needy and afflicted persons, besides an immense number of other members, some of whom were in opulent and others in only moderate circumstances. Euseb. Eccl. Hist., VI, 43.

SCHEME OF REDEMPTION.

6. 1 Timothy iv, 14: "Neglect not the gift which is in thee, which was given thee according to prophecy, with the laying on of the hands of the PRESBYTERY, (τοῦ πρεσβυτερίου,) an assembly of aged men or Elders. Luke xxii, 66, and Acts xxii, 5.

7. 1 Timothy v, 17: "Let the ELDERS that rule well be counted worthy of double honor, especially those who labor in word and teaching."

8. Titus i, 5: "For this cause left I thee in Crete, that thou shouldest set in order the things that are wanting, and ordain ELDERS in every city, as I commanded thee."

9. James v, 14: "Is any sick among you, let him call for the ELDERS of the Church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord."

10. 1 Peter v: "The ELDERS who are among you I exhort who am also an Elder, and a witness of the sufferings of Christ, and also a partaker of the glory which shall be revealed."

The only apparent exception to this rule is found in Revelation, first, second, and third chapters, where each of the seven Churches of provincial Asia is represented as having but one angel to preside over it. This title is by many supposed to denote the presiding Bishop of each Church. And hence it is that these chapters are often cited to prove that the Episcopal form of Church government was prevalent in the Churches even in the apostolic age.

Alleged exception to this general rule.

But in reference to this matter it is enough to say,

Reply to this allegation.

I. That we should be very cautious not to give to any word or passage in the Bible a meaning which is manifestly in conflict with the plain and obvious meaning of other passages. The Bible is a unit, and every word in it must be interpreted in the light of every book, and chapter, and verse of both the Old and the New Testament.

ELDERS.

II. That it is especially important to observe this rule in interpreting those books which are confessedly symbolical. The language of symbols is a sort of short-hand writing, and it must, therefore, be interpreted in the light of the more plain, simple, and didactic portions of the Scriptures. We have reason to suspect the correctness of any theory which has its origin in the Apocalypse.

III. That in symbolical language it is very common to put one for many, an individual for a class, or a species for a genus. In the prophecies of Daniel, for instance, the word king means sometimes a kingdom and sometimes a whole dynasty, or race of kings. And just so it is in this most symbolical of all books, the Apocalypse of the Apostle John. The four Living Creatures and the twenty-four Elders are evidently but the representatives of the Redeemed out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation. Rev. v, 8-10. The star which fell from Heaven (ix, 1) denotes the Teachers of Christianity in Western Asia, most or all of whom had fallen before the Mahometans came as locusts out of the religious darkness that was then brooding over a large portion of the Eastern world. And the Angel of the fourteenth chapter, who had the everlasting Gospel to preach to all mankind, is manifestly but a symbolical representation of all those faithful missionaries of the Church who are even now going forth to fulfill this sublime and beautiful prophecy.

IV. It is, therefore, most probable that the name angels is used in like manner in the first, second, and third chapters, to denote simply all the elders who were then presiding *over each of the several Churches of Asia. And hence, I think, we may safely conclude that it is a law of the Kingdom of Heaven that a plurality of Elders shall preside over every congregation which has attained to its majority, and which, of course, no longer needs the instruction and guardian care of an Evangelist.

SCHEME OF REDEMPTION.

These Elders are of course all officially equal. But this does not forbid their appointing a Chairman and Secretary of their own Board, and adopting such subordinate rules and regulations for their own benefit as may be necessary in order to the full and faithful discharge of all the trusts committed to them. All native-born American citizens are, according to the Constitution, free and equal. But it does not hence follow that they are all fit to be presidents, governors, judges, and legislators. Our representatives in Congress, having their proper credentials, all go to the Capitol on terms of legal equality. But it does not follow from this that they are all equally entitled to the Speaker's Chair. There are in every body of men natural and educational differences, which should ever be regarded in its organization; and to this general law the Presbytery of a congregation forms no exception. It is absurd to suppose that five, ten, or twenty men elected to the Eldership of a Church are all equally well prepared to discharge all the duties of their calling. The best Ruler is not

Organization of the College of
Elders.

* Another mode of interpreting the word "angel" in these letters rests on the assumption that each of the seven Churches named had sent a messenger to John in Patmos, as Epaphroditus was sent to Paul in Rome, (Phil. iv, 18,) and that John was directed to send these epistles to the afore-said Churches by their several messengers. This interpretation is favored by the etymology of the word ἄγγελος, which primarily means a messenger; but it does not well harmonize with the fact that throughout these seven epistles the angels are addressed as the responsible rulers and guardians of their several Churches.

ELDERS.

always the best Teacher ; and the best Teacher is not always the best Pastor. Every one has his proper gift from God. In the primitive Churches all Elders were Rulers, but only some of them labored constantly in word and doctrine ; and hence it is obviously both the duty and the privilege of every college of Elders to form just such an organization of their own body, and to make such a division of their labor as will best enable them to meet all the wants of the congregation over which the Holy Spirit has made them Overseers.

Their field of labor extends no further than the limits of their own congregation. To preach the Gospel to the heathen is no part of the Elder's office ; and to rule over other congregations would be usurpation. The Elder who leaves his own Church and goes to another enters it simply as a private member, just as the Governor of Kentucky would have no rights in Ohio beyond the rights of citizenship.

The Elders' field of labor.

That the Elder's office is to continue while the Church continues is evident,

I. From the fact that Elders will always be needed in the Churches. Their work is a perpetuity, and hence so, also, is their office. Christ has not created a body without giving to it the necessary members.

Perpetuity of the Elder's office.

II. From the fact that no Church in primitive times was regarded as complete and capable of sustaining itself without Elders. Paul and Barnabas ordained Elders in every Church that they established during their first missionary tour through Asia Minor, Acts xiv, 23 ; and Titus was left in Crete that he might ordain Elders in every city Titus i, 5 without interruption, though often very greatly perverted from the beginning to the present time. To this fact all ecclesiastical historians bear witness.

III. From the fact that the office has been continued

CHAPTER V.

DEACONS.

THE word deacon is from the Greek διάκονος, a waiter, attendant, servant, or minister; and this is from the verb διακονέω, to wait upon, to serve, to minister; and this again is derived from διδκω or διήκω, to run, to hasten. The radical idea is, therefore, active service.

- In this generic sense it is applied,
- Illustrations. 1. To Christ himself. Romans xv, 8; and Gal. ii, 17.
2. To him who would be chief of the Apostles. Matt xx, 26; xxiii, 11; Mark ix, 35; x, 43, etc.
3. To any and all of the Apostles. 1 Cor. iii, 5; 2 Cor. iii, 6; vi, 4.
4. To Evangelists. Eph. vi, 21; Col. i, 7; iv, 7; 1 Thess. iii, 2; 1 Tim. iv, 6.
5. To any and every faithful servant of Christ. John xii, 26.
6. To civil magistrates. Romans xiii, 4.
7. To the emissaries of Satan. 2 Cor. xi, 15.
8. To waiters at festivals, etc. Matt. xxii, 13; John ii, 5, 9.

But besides these various applications of the word in its first intention, it is used, also, in a more limited and official sense to denote a particular class of Christian Ministers. This is obvious from the following passages:

DEACONS.

Evidence that it is used, also,
in an official sense

1. Philippians i, 1: "Paul and Timothy, the servants of Jesus Christ, to all the saints in Christ Jesus who are at Philippi, with the BISHOPS and DEACONS." Here the Deacons are distinguished from the saints in general, and are ranked with the Bishops as an order of Ministers.

2. 1 Timothy iii, 8-13: "Likewise must the DEACONS be grave, not double-tongued, not given to much wine, not greedy of filthy lucre; holding the mystery of the faith in a pure conscience. And let these also first be proved; and then let them use the office of a Deacon, being found blameless. Even so must their wives be grave, not slanderers, sober, faithful in all things. Let the DEACONS be the husbands of one wife, ruling their children and their own houses well. For they who have used the office of a Deacon well purchase to themselves a good degree and great boldness in the faith which is in Christ Jesus."

In this passage Paul again associates the Deacons with the Bishops as a distinct order of ecclesiastical officers. Like the Elders they must first be proved; and then they are permitted to officiate (διδασκοντες) as Ministers of the Church. And those who perform the office of a Deacon (διδασκοντες) well we are assured procure for themselves a good standing-place and much confidence in the faith. These passages, therefore, prove, beyond all reasonable doubt, that the Deacons of the primitive Church were a distinct order of Christian Ministers.

But what was their rank, and what duties were they required to discharge?

SCHEME OF REDEMPTION.

This question will be best answered by referring to the occasion of their first appointment. This is given in Acts vi, 1-7, as follows: "And in those days, when the number of the disciples was multiplied, there arose a murmuring of the Hellenists against the Hebrews, because their widows were neglected in the daily ministration. Then the Twelve called the multitude of the disciples to them, and said, It is not reason that we should leave the word of God and serve tables. Wherefore, brethren, look ye out among you seven men of honest report, full of the Holy Spirit and wisdom, whom we may appoint over this business. But we will give ourselves continually to prayer and to the ministry of the word. And the saying pleased the whole multitude: and they chose Stephen, a man full of the Holy Spirit, and Philip and Prochorus, and Nicanor, and Timon, and Parmenas and Nicolas, a proselyte of Antioch; whom they set before the Apostles. And when they had prayed they laid their hands on them. And the word of the Lord increased; and the number of the disciples multiplied in Jerusalem greatly; and a great company of the priests became obedient to the faith."

Circumstances which led to the appointment of the first Deacons.

From this narrative, then, it appears,

I. That it was made the duty of these men to attend simply to the secular wants and interests of the congregation. It is true that the neglect of a particular class of widows was the immediate occasion of their appointment. But surely no one would thence infer that they were officially restricted to the particular case which suggested the necessity of their appointment; that in case of further neglect by the congregation it would be necessary to appoint others to feed the Hebrew widows, others to clothe the naked, others to wait on the sick, and others, again, to administer to the wants of the superannuated. This would be to multiply offices and officers rather too fast for even the most visionary. The historian here records a fact, not as an isolated abstraction, but rather as an exponent of a great principle. The fact is a simple one, but the principle involved is very broad and comprehensive. It embraces all that pertains to the secular business of the Church. Those who feed the widows must have under their control the treasury of the congregation. And hence the proposition of the Apostles was to surrender this department of labor entirely to the seven, and give themselves exclusively "to prayer and to the ministry of the Word."

Duties of the Diaconate.

DEACONS.

To wait on the secular concerns of the Church was, therefore, the limit of their official duties. Their office comprehended nothing less, and it certainly embraced nothing more. It conferred no authority whatever, either to teach or to preach, in either the public or the private assembly. The Elders must all be apt to teach, and every Evangelist is required to preach the Word. But, in all that is said of the Deacons in the New Testament, there is not given a single intimation that either teaching or preaching is any part of their office.

They may, indeed, in a certain sense, preach the Word unofficially. This is, to a certain extent, the duty and privilege of every disciple. Rev. xxii, 17. And certainly there is no better time to administer to the wants of the soul than when we are feeding and clothing the body. Every Deacon should, therefore, "know his opportunity," and improve it. He should ever be ready to speak a word of comfort and consolation to the weary soul while he is laboring to supply the wants of its clay tabernacle. But, in doing so, it is well to remember that he acts simply as a Christian, and not as an officer of the Church.

SCHEME OF REDEMPTION.

II. From these premises we also learn that, in order to be eligible to this office, every candidate must possess the three following qualifications:

Qualifications of Deacons.

1. He must be a man of honest report. That is, he must have a good reputation, a well-attested character, both in the Church and out of it.

2. He must be full of the Holy Spirit, so that its fruits, love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, fidelity, meekness, and temperance, may characterize his entire demeanor.

3. He must also be full of wisdom, and distinguished, of course, for his prudence, and other practical virtues which are necessary to the proper discharge of his official duties. For, if a man can not manage his own temporal affairs well, how can he take care of the house and treasury of the Lord?

All this is but a summary of what Paul says of the qualifications of Deacons in the third chapter of his first letter to Timothy.

It is not probable that the number seven is given here as an essential element of the Diaconate. The number of Deacons, like that of the Elders, should, no doubt, vary according to the various wants of each congregation. So we would judge from all the data furnished in the New Testament. But, nevertheless, many of the primitive Churches followed strictly, in this respect, the example of the Mother Church. And, to supply the deficiency in the Diaconate, they appointed Sub-Deacons, Acolyths, etc. In the Church of Rome, for example, about the middle of the third century, there were only seven Deacons, though the number of Elders was forty-six. Euseb. Eccl. Hist. vi, 43.

Required number of Deacons in a Church.

ELECTION OF OFFICERS.

The Diaconate of the primitive Church was not confined to male members. Deaconesses were also appointed to attend to the wants of the sick and the needy, especially of their own sex. This is evident from Rom. xvi, 1, and 1 Timothy v, 9-15. This order was continued, in the Greek Church, till about the beginning of the thirteenth century, and it is to be regretted that it was ever discontinued in any Church. The poor and the needy will always be with us, and will require the attention of both Deacons and Deaconesses just as much as they did in the Churches of Jerusalem, Cenchrea, and Ephesus.

Deaconesses of the primitive Church.

CHAPTER VI.

APPOINTMENT OF OFFICERS.

THIS, in its widest and most comprehensive sense, implies three things:

I. The law in reference to their qualifications.

Three things implied in the appointment of Officers.

II. The law in reference to their election.

III. The law in reference to their ordination.

Of the first of these I have already spoken with sufficient fullness, and I will, therefore, now proceed to the brief consideration of the second and third.

SECTION I.—ELECTION OF OFFICERS.

I speak now only of the permanent Ministry of the Church, consisting of Evangelists, Elders, and Deacons

SCHEME OF REDEMPTION.

By whom should they be elected to their respective offices? Should they be chosen by the few, or by the many; by the Church herself, or by her officers?

General law with respect to the election of Officers.

That it is the law of Christ that THE CHURCH SHOULD ELECT ALL HER OWN OFFICERS is evident from several considerations.

I. Because the Church is now, under Christ, a self-governing and self-perpetuating body.

Evidence drawn from her being constituted a self-governing and self-perpetuating body.

There was a time when she was incapable of this. In her infancy extraordinary helps were necessary, both to her growth and to her prosperity. But these helps were to be continued only during her minority, "till we should all come to the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, to a perfect man, to the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ; that we might no longer be children tossed and carried about with every wind of doctrine, through the artifice of men, and cunning craftiness whereby they lie in wait to deceive; but speaking the truth in love, we might grow up in all things into Him who is the Head, even Christ; from whom the whole body fitly joined together, and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body, unto the edifying of itself in love." Ephesians iv, 13-16. This point having been reached soon after the Canon of the Holy Scriptures was completed, all miraculous helps were then taken away, and henceforth the Church was to govern, extend, and edify herself by her own inherent energy, and through the agency of such officers as she might herself choose and appoint.

II. Because the Church herself, and not the Ministry of the Church, is the pillar and support of the truth 1 Timothy iii, 15. She is herself the stone cut out of the mountain without hands, which is to utterly destroy and consume the iron, and the clay, and the brass, and the silver, and the gold of all antichristian power and dominion. Daniel ii, 44. She is the Golden Candlestick in the hand of the Lord to dispense the light of the Gospel to the ends of the Earth. Rev. i, 20. She is the Temple and dwelling-place of Jehovah, where all the pure in heart may now find refuge. 1 Cor. iii, 9-17. She is the body of Christ; the fullness of Him who filleth all in all. Ephesians i, 23.

ELECTION OF OFFICERS.

From her agency in supporting and propagating the Truth.

III. Because the Church herself is the heritage (κληρος, clergy) of God, and all her Ministers are but her servants. 1 Peter v, 2; 2 Cor. iv, 5, etc. And hence it is nothing more than becoming and right that she should choose those who are to minister to her wants and comfort.

From her relations to God and to the Ministry.

IV. Because the members of the Church at Jerusalem were required to choose their own Deacons, notwithstanding the presence of the most august and impartial body of Christian Ministers ever found in any one congregation on Earth. Acts vi, 1-7. Surely, if ever there was an occasion when the popular vote might, with propriety, be suspended, and the officers of a congregation be elected by the suffrages of a few, that was the time when the first Deacons were chosen in Jerusalem. There was evidently danger that party spirit would be excited unless the whole matter were disposed of with great prudence. And there were the Apostles, who knew all the members well, and their respective qualifications, and in whose judgment and impartiality the whole congregation had entire confidence. Surely to the eye of sense and finite reason, the shortest and best way to settle the whole matter would seem to be that the Apostles themselves should choose and appoint men to wait on the poor and the needy. But no; under the infallible guidance of the Holy Spirit, the Apostles thought very differently. They knew well that one of the great and important objects for which the Church was established on Earth was to elevate and educate her own members; to call out the energies and the resources of all; to make every one feel that he should be a living stone in the Temple of our God, and that he is, to some extent, responsible for the edification, growth, and influence of the whole body. And hence they, as the plenipotentiaries of Christ and the inspired lawgivers of the Kingdom of Heaven, said to the whole multitude of disciples: "Look ye out among you seven men of honest report, full of the Holy Spirit and wisdom, whom we may appoint over this business. . . . And the saying pleased the whole multitude; and they chose Stephen, a man full of faith and of the Holy Spirit, and Philip, and Prochorus, and Nicanor, and Timon, and Parmenas, and Nicolas, a proselyte of Antioch." Acts vi, 3, 5. This one example, then, when fairly and fully considered, should really be an end of the whole controversy touching the election of Church officers.

From the example of the Jerusalem Church.

SCHEME OF REDEMPTION.

V. Because Timothy was recommended to Paul as a man well qualified for the Evangelical work, by the brethren of Lystra and Iconium. The testimony of Luke is as follows: "Then came he (Paul) to Derbe and Lystra. And behold a certain disciple was there named Timothy, the son of a certain woman who was a Jewess, and believed, but his father was a

From the case of Timothy.

ELECTION OF OFFICERS.

Greek, who was well reported of by the brethren who were at Lystra and Iconium. Him would Paul have to go forth with him; and he took and circumcised him, because of the Jews who were in those quarters: for they all knew that his father was a Greek." Acts xvi, 1-3.

From this it seems that it was in compliance with Paul's wish that Timothy was at this time set apart to the Evangelical work. But in making this choice he was evidently influenced by the recommendation of the brethren of both Lystra and Iconium. And as these things were written for our instruction, we are, I think, warranted in the conclusion that every candidate for the Evangelical office should, as a condition of his ordination, be first recommended by at least a plurality of Churches.*

VI. Because it was the custom of the primitive Churches to choose their own messengers and agents, even for temporary purposes. This is proved by such passages as the following:

1. 1 Corinthians xvi, 3: "And when I (Paul) come, whomsoever ye shall approve by your letters, them will I send to bring your liberality to Jerusalem." From this we learn that even the Apostle Paul, with all his plenary

*This case is somewhat different from that of the Deacons before mentioned. They were chosen by the members of but one Church; but it seems that the brethren of both Lystra and Iconium concurred in the choice of Timothy, or at least in recommending him as a person well qualified for the Evangelical work. The reason for making this difference is most likely owing to the fact that every Deacon is a servant of but one congregation. Beyond its limits he has no official authority. But all the Churches are, to some extent, interested in the labors of every Evangelist. And hence it is eminently becoming and proper that at least two or more of them should concur in his appointment.

Reason of the difference between the election of Timothy and that of the seven Deacons.

SCHEME OF REDEMPTION.

power and inspiration, would not interfere with the right of the Corinthians to appoint their own messengers to convey their bounty to the suffering brethren in Judea.

2. 2 Corinthians viii, 18, 19: "And we have sent with him (Titus) the brother (unknown, probably Luke) whose praise is in the Gospel throughout all the Churches. And not only (is his praise in all the Churches, but it is he) who was also chosen by the Churches to travel with us with this grace, which is administered by us to the glory of the same Lord, and declaration of your ready mind."

3. 2 Corinthians viii, 22, 23: "And we have sent with them (Titus and the brother whose praise was in all the Churches) the brother (unknown) whom we have oftentimes proved diligent in many things, and now much more diligent through the great confidence which he has toward you. If any inquire concerning Titus, he is my partner and fellow-laborer for you: or if our brethren be inquired of they are the messengers (ἀπόστολοι) of the Churches, and the glory of Christ." See, also, Acts xv, 22

This evidence is, I think, abundantly sufficient to establish our main proposition. True, indeed, there is nothing in all this which relates directly and specifically to the election of Elders; and there is nothing of this kind in the New Testament. The reason is obvious: it is not necessary: the law of election is made sufficiently plain without it. If the Churches are competent to elect their own Deacons, Evangelists, and special agents and messengers, surely they are also competent to elect their own Elders.

And hence we conclude that it is a law of the Kingdom of Heaven that the Churches should severally elect all their own officers.

Election of Elders: how determined.

Conclusion.

ELECTION OF OFFICERS.

How they shall do this is no where stated clearly, distinctly, and definitely in the New Testament. Much is here left to be determined by the Churches themselves, or their chosen and acting representatives. There are, however, many general laws which should be as strictly regarded in all such cases as if they were a thousand-fold more specific and definite.* Such, for example, are the following:

Specific mode of election undetermined.

General laws.

I. "Whether, therefore, ye eat or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God." 1 Cor. x, 31. This law positively excludes all selfishness, party spirit, and every thing else that is inconsistent with the glory of God and the unity, harmony, and prosperity of the Church.

II. "Let all things be done decently and in order."

*Had the Divine Founder of Christianity attempted to govern his Church in all cases simply by specific rules and precepts, truly, indeed, the world itself would not have contained the books which would have been written. The "lex scripta," or written code of England, consists of thirty-five large quarto volumes, besides cart-loads of local and private acts of Parliament. And yet it very rarely happens that an existing law can be found which is in all respects applicable to a given case. Almost every new case of law and equity differs, in some respects, from every antecedent one. Every lawyer knows that it is only by analogy that court-decisions are generally applied to new cases of litigation. What, then, would have been the magnitude of the Divine code had God attempted to govern his people in all ages and under all circumstances by specific rules and regulations! Surely we can not too much admire that wisdom which for such a code has substituted a little volume of a few hundred pages, and which, notwithstanding its great brevity, has made it a perfect rule of faith and practice for every accountable being in every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation while time endures! In doing so he has, in the first place, made the whole Bible, and especially the New Testament, a book of motives; secondly he has enacted some very general laws and regulations; thirdly, he has illustrated these laws and the general principles of his government by a great variety of authoritative examples; and finally, he has given to us such specific laws and ordinances as are necessary to make the Bible a perfect Rule of faith and practice.

Impracticability of governing the Church in all cases by specific laws.

SCHEME OF REDEMPTION.

1 Cor. xiv, 40. This law requires that all those rules which have been found necessary for conducting and governing popular elections should be duly regarded in the election of Church officers, and that the house of God should appear to all persons and under all circumstances as a house of order.

Much, indeed, must always be left to the force of circumstances. The same degree of formality, for instance, is not always required in small assemblies which would be necessary in larger ones. But in all cases the general rules and precepts of the New Testament require that something like the following order should be observed in the election of all Church officers :

Order of electing Church
Officers.

I. That the Church should, through her own chosen representatives, determine how many persons should be elected. In every organized Church the Elders are, of course, the proper persons to determine all such questions after due consultation and conference with the members. But in unorganized Churches prudence would require that a committee of the more aged and thoughtful brethren should be appointed to prepare such matters for the action and approval of the congregation. No exhibitions of licentiousness nor of a wild and reckless democracy should ever be allowed to appear in the house of God.

II. That said Representatives should also act in the case as a committee of nomination. The views, wishes, and sentiments of all should, of course, be duly considered and regarded ; and as many persons may be nominated as the members severally desire, provided that in the judgment of the committee they be not notoriously destitute of the required qualifications. But all nominations should be made through the Elders or other chosen representatives, and never at random in the popular assembly.

ELECTION OF OFFICERS.

III. Due notice as to the time of the election having been given, at a meeting called for the purpose, the suffrages of the congregation should be taken by ballot; each member voting for as many of the nominees as are to be elected. In some cases it may not be expedient for all to vote. Very young persons and others not well acquainted with the character and qualifications of the nominees, would do well to waive their right of suffrage in so important a matter. But all the members of the Church should be allowed to vote who desire to do so.

IV. The votes having been counted, the persons, to the number previously agreed on, having the greatest number of votes, should be declared the officers elect of the congregation; provided, however, that each has received a majority of all the votes cast. No one should attempt to serve any Church in any capacity who has not been elected by the suffrages of at least a majority of his brethren; and, if possible, the vote should be made unanimous.

SECTION II.—ORDINATION OF OFFICERS.

The persons duly elected should then be ordained or set apart to their respective offices by the whole congregation, with prayer and fasting, and through the imposition of the hands of their Elders, or other chosen representatives.

General Proposition.

It is not enough that they be elected by the suffrages of the people. The common-sense of mankind requires that all candidates for important offices, whether civil or ecclesiastical, shall be installed with some solemn and impressive ceremonies. And hence the Apostles said to the disciples at Jerusalem, Do ye choose and we will appoint. This is all that is meant in the Scriptures by ordination. It is simply a solemn setting apart of such persons to their respective offices as have been previously elected by the suffrages of the disciples, according to the standard of qualifications laid down by the Holy Spirit.

SCHEME OF REDEMPTION.

Meaning of Ordination.

That this was always done by the imposition of hands, with prayer and fasting, seems clear from the following passages of Scripture :

Evidence that it was always done with prayer, fasting, and the imposition of hands.

1. Acts vi, 5, 6: "And the saying pleased the whole multitude. And they chose Stephen, a man full of faith and of the Holy Spirit, and Philip, and Prochorus, and Nicanor, and Timon, and Parmenas, and Nicolas, a proselyte of Antioch, whom they set before the Apostles; and when they had prayed they laid their hands on them."

2. Acts xiii, 1-3: "Now there were in the Church which was at Antioch certain Prophets and Teachers: as Barnabas, and Simeon, who was called Niger, and Lucius of Cyrene, and Manaen, who had been brought up with Herod the tetrarch, and Saul. As they ministered to the Lord and fasted, the Holy Spirit said, Separate to me Barnabas and Saul, for the work whereunto I have called them. And when they had fasted and prayed, and laid their hands on them, they sent them away."

3. Acts xiv, 23: "And when they had ordained them Elders in every Church, and had prayed with fasting, they commended them to the Lord, on whom they believed."

4. 1 Timothy iv, 14: "Neglect not the gift which is in thee, which was given thee according to prophecy. with the laying on of the hands of the presbytery." Compare 2 Timothy i, 6.

ORDINATION OF OFFICERS.

In the first of these passages mention is made only of prayer and the imposition of hands ; in the second, prayer, fasting, and the imposition of hands are all mentioned ; in the third, only prayer and fasting ; and in the fourth, only the laying on of hands. And hence some have too hastily inferred that in the primitive Church there was no uniform practice in the solemn rite of ordination.

False inference from these premises.

But this is a very loose and unsatisfactory way of interpreting the facts and phenomena of the Bible. To the ancients the celestial system was, in like manner, a labyrinth of confusion. The phenomena of the heavens seemed to be without order and without harmony. But the genius of Sir Isaac Newton has removed this false impression. That great interpreter of nature's laws has demonstrated that the God of nature is a God of order ; that every sun, and moon, and planet, and comet, and asteroid, moves under the influence of one general principle, which binds in eternal harmony the whole material universe.

Illustration
drawn from Astronomy.

It is so, also, in Revelation. To the superficial reader of the Bible there seems to be a want of uniformity in many other cases, as well as in ordination. In the Great Commission, for example, Christ said to his Apostles : "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." Some ten days after this, in reply to the anxious inquiry of the multitude. "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" the Apostle Peter said : "Repent and be baptized, every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit." To the important question of the Philippian jailer, "Sirs, what must I do to be saved?" Paul replied, "Believe on the

Illustration
drawn from the conditions of pardon.

SCHEME OF REDEMPTION.

Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved, and thy house." But in his letter to the Roman brethren the same Apostle says: "With the heart man believeth unto righteousness, and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation."

From such premises some have hastily concluded that the Bible is a chaotic mass of palpable contradictions. Others have inferred that the apparent want of harmony is owing to the unimportant character of some of the conditions specified. They allege, for instance, that it is evident from Paul's reply to the Philippian jailer, that confession and baptism may be dispensed with as unnecessary to salvation. But others again see none of these imaginary difficulties. They have made Christianity a study; they have surveyed the whole Christian System, from its center to its circumference, just as Newton surveyed the celestial system; and to them, therefore, all things pertaining to it seem to be in perfect order and harmony. They see in the circumstances under which these responses were given a sufficient reason for not expressing what was then well understood, or what was evidently implied and about to be practically illustrated; and hence they very rationally and properly conclude that none of these conditions can, in any case, be safely dispensed with. They infer that these are all divinely appointed means of salvation; that no one can, in fact, have a well-grounded assurance that his sins are all forgiven until he has believed with his heart, confessed with his mouth, repented of his sins, and been baptized into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit.

The same rule of interpretation evidently applies to those passages which relate to ordination. Luke says that the Apostles prayed and laid their hands on the seven Deacons; but he does not say that they did not fast at the same time. One of these seven afterward became an Evangelist; and nothing is recorded concerning either his election or his ordination. But will any one hence infer that, like some precocious youths in modern times, he went out to do the work of an Evangelist on his own responsibility, without any of the formalities of a regular appointment? Paul says that his own hands and the hands of the Presbytery were laid on Timothy. He says nothing here about prayer and fasting. But will any one presume to say that in the ordination of Timothy these solemnities were omitted? Such an inference is just as illogical as the conclusion that repentance, confession, and baptism are not conditions of pardon in the Christian System, because, forsooth, Paul said to the Philippian jailer, "believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved, and thy house."

ORDINATION OF OFFICERS.

The Law of ordination in this respect analogous to the Law of pardon.

But enough has been said on this subject—enough to warrant the conclusion that all the Deacons, Elders, and Evangelists of the primitive Church were ordained by the imposition of hands, with prayer and fasting, and, consequently, that no one can, even now, be legally and properly set apart as an officer or minister of the Christian Church without these solemnities.

Conclusion.

I know it is alleged by some that, in the cases cited, hands were imposed for the purpose of imparting spiritual gifts, and not for the purpose of ordination. But such an allegation is wholly unwarranted by the facts as they stand recorded. For,

Whether hands were imposed in these cases for the purpose of imparting Spiritual Gifts.

I. In Acts vi, 3, 6, it is clearly implied that the

SCHEME OF REDEMPTION.

Apostles laid hands on the seven merely as a part of the ceremony of ordination, or for the purpose of setting them apart as the Deacons of the Church. Their instruction to the multitude was simply as follows: Do ye choose seven men whom we may appoint over this business. The disciples did so, and set them before the Apostles; and when they had prayed they laid their hands on them. Here there is not a word said about spiritual gifts, and nothing is to be found in the context which warrants the conclusion that any thing of the kind was then imparted.

II. The case of Paul and Barnabas, given in Acts xiii, 1-3, is even more conclusive against any and every such allegation. For,

1. The command of the Holy Spirit to the Prophets and Teachers was not to qualify Paul and Barnabas for the work to which they had been called, but simply to set them apart to the work. Nothing is here said about imparting spiritual gifts.

2. It does not appear from the inspired record that these Prophets and Teachers had the power to impart such gifts. This was one of the peculiar and incommunicable functions of the Apostolic office. Even Philip the Evangelist, though able to work miracles himself, was not able to bestow this power on the Samaritans whom he had converted. And hence the necessity that Peter and John should go down from Jerusalem to Samaria for this purpose. They did so. And when they had prayed and laid their hands on some of the young converts they immediately began to work miracles, to the astonishment of Simon Magus and the whole multitude. Acts viii, 5-25.

3. But even if it could be proved, which it can not.

ORDINATION OF OFFICERS.

that these Prophets and Teachers had power to confer on others the gift of working miracles, it would, nevertheless, be sufficient for our present purpose to know that Paul at least stood in need of no such gifts. He was not dependent on these, or on any other set of men, for his qualifications to preach the Gospel. See Galatians i-ii.

III. The case of Timothy is equally clear and conclusive. From 1 Timothy iv, 14, compared with Examination of 1 Tim. iv, 14. Acts xvi, 1-3, it is evident that the Elders of Lystra laid their hands on him for some purpose. But to impart miraculous gifts they had no power. And hence we are constrained to believe that it was simply for the purpose of ordaining Timothy as an Evangelist, and that the same order should be observed in the Church throughout all coming time. See Numbers viii, 9-11, etc.

But who, it will be asked, should impose hands on candidates for ordination? This is a very grave question, and it is one which should be very seriously considered. The persons who should ordain.

In the ordination of the seven Deacons in the Jerusalem Church this was done by the twelve Apostles. But in what capacity did they then and there officiate? Did they act in this case with all their plenary authority as the Apostles of Christ? Or, as Evangelists, did they labor, like Timothy and Titus, to set in order the things which were wanting? Or, did they officiate merely as the Elders of the Church? In what capacity the Apostles acted in ordaining the first Deacons.

In order to answer this question satisfactorily we should, I think, distinguish between the legislative part of this important transaction and the mere act of ordination. To legislate was an exclusive function of the apostolic office. The Apostles alone had a right to make laws and ordinances for the Kingdom of Heaven? To them, as the plenipotentiaries of Christ, it certainly belonged exclusively to say what should be done in the pending crisis. But the work of ordination was transferable. It was transferred. Titus was left in Crete to set in order the things which were there wanting, and to ordain Elders in every city. And one of the purposes for which Timothy was left in Ephesus was, evidently, to ordain Evangelists, Elders, and Deacons. Besides, as we have seen, the Elders of the Church at Lystra took part in the ordination of Timothy. And hence I think it follows, beyond all reasonable doubt, that in the ordination of the first Deacons the Apostles did not act as Apostles, but merely as the representatives of the Church in Jerusalem. And when it is remembered that all existing orders of the Ministry, whether they be Evangelists, Elders, or Deacons, Conclusion with regard to the work of ordination.

SCHEME OF REDEMPTION.

are but the servants of the Church, the conclusion seems to be inevitable that it is the business of the Church to ordain, as well as to elect all her own officers.

In all fully organized Churches this should, of course, be done by their Elders as their duly chosen and appointed representatives, with the aid of such Evangelists as they may see fit to invite.

Who should officiate for organized and unorganized Churches.

But in every unorganized Church the officiating Evangelist should act, as did Timothy and Titus, as the representative of the congregation, in connection with such other persons as she may herself select for the purpose of coöperating with him. But in the New Testament there is no clear evidence that any one man was ever authorized to ordain another. Titus was required to ordain Elders in every city, as Paul had commanded him; and that, as we learn from all the examples recorded, was by the joint agency and coöperation of several persons.

ORDINATION OF OFFICERS.

As a general rule, ordained Ministers should be allowed and encouraged to remain in office so long as they continue to labor faithfully within the sphere of their appointment. But it is always implied that those who confer the gift of office have also power to take it away whenever, in their judgment, the glory of God requires it. The power to create implies, of course, the power to destroy.

In view of all that has been said, then, on the subject of the Christian ministry, how very great are their responsibilities! How very solemn is the account which every servant of the Church will have to render to Christ at the judgment of the great day! Let me entreat you, then, my dear brethren, as many of you as may read this work, and especially my young brethren,

I. To make the Word of God your constant and only guide. Tradition may mislead us, and so also may all speculative philosophy; but "all Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for teaching, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished for every good work."

II. Be men of prayer. Pray always. Pray without ceasing. It is not enough that you study the Bible to know your duty. You must also look to God constantly for help to enable you to perform it. "Ask," then, "and ye shall receive; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened to you."

III. Be men of energy. Give all possible diligence to make your ministry a success. We have abundant reason to rejoice and thank God that primitive Christianity is making constant and rapid progress in the world. But how much, alas! how very much still remains to be done before the world is converted and the Church herself brought up to the Divine standard of spiritual purity and practical godliness! Remember, then, dear brethren, that for much of all this you are personally responsible

SCHEME OF REDEMPTION.

IV. While you labor to do every thing for the glory of God, study at the same time to cultivate a spirit of kindness and benevolence toward all men. Remember that "the end of the commandment is love out of a pure heart, and out of a good conscience, and out of faith unfeigned." Cultivate, then, in this respect, the spirit of your Divine Master. "Bless those who curse you; do good to those who hate you; and pray for those who insult you and persecute you," and soon you will sit down with Christ on his throne, even as he has overcome and sat down with the Father on his throne.

"Ye servants of the Lord,
Each in his office wait;
With joy obey his heavenly word,
And watch before his gate.

Let all your lamps be bright,
And trim the golden flame;
Gird up your loins, as in his sight,
For awful is his name.

Watch! 't is the Lord's command;
And while we speak he 's near;
Mark the first signal of his hand,
And ready all appear.

O, happy servant he
In such a posture found!
He shall his Lord with rapture see,
And be with honor crowned."

APPENDIX No. 2

views of
DAVID LIPSCOMB

ELDERS.

1. How and by whom should elders and deacons be appointed?
2. How long, as a rule, should a church continue to meet before such an appointment is made?
3. Does the term elder always carry the idea of advanced age in years or advanced in Scripture knowledge?
4. Are there two classes or more of elders? It would appear so from 1 Tim. 5: 17.

The Holy Spirit has described the qualifications of elders in the first letter to Timothy and in that to Titus. None are perfect in their character. So none will have in perfection these qualifications laid down—that is, all will possess them in a human way. In describing such as elders, the Spirit appoints all who possess these qualities to do the work of elders. They will be found doing the work of elders to some extent of themselves, else the qualities would not all be manifest. The congregation will see these qualities thus manifested. The multitude of the disciples, when a proper work was neglected by the church, were required (Acts 6: 3) to “look ye out among you seven men” with the required qualifications. We suppose in any case where a work was neglected the multitude or body of disciples would select those among them possessing in a humanly practical degree the prescribed qualifications to do the work. The only work, so far as the Scriptures show, done by the church was to choose those described by the Holy Spirit. In the case of the seven hands were laid on them by the apostles. Whether this was to be done by others than inspired men has always been a question a little difficult for me to decide. Hands were laid upon persons occasionally during the ministry of the apostles. In all cases except two, this one and Barnabas and Saul (Acts 13), it is specifically stated it was done to impart the Holy Spirit or that the Holy Spirit was imparted in doing it. This is not stated in these two cases. Yet the parties in both cases on whom hands were laid did manifest a power to work miracles, of which no account is given previous to the imposition of hands. This truth, together with the consideration that all the other cases were intended to impart spiritual gifts, raises the doubt in my mind if this was not the object in these cases also, inasmuch as almost every one called to do special duty before the New Testament was given was endowed with a spiritual gift to guide him in that work. If so, laying on of hands was confined to the age and persons possessed of spiritual gifts.

It is very certain, at any rate, that men did discharge all the duties pertaining to the work of the church of God without having hands imposed on them. With this certainty and the doubts as to the matter of imposition of hands, I have never been willing to have laid or to lay on hands. "Whatsoever is not of faith is sin."

I do not think there was any rule or custom regulating how long a church should exist before elders should be appointed. In the Jerusalem church, it seems, the neglect of a proper work was the occasion of their being set apart. A daily ministration to the widows and the poor was going on before these persons were set apart to attend to the work. This, we take it, was done under the offering of the disciples, excited by the love of the gospel and teachings of the apostles. In that ministration the widows of the Greek-speaking people were neglected. They were strangers, foreigners—spoke a foreign language. They were, doubtless, isolated from the others; and although they were all Jews or proselytes, there was a prejudice against them, and they were neglected in this daily distribution. Then the apostles called the whole multitude of the disciples together, told them of the neglect that had come to their knowledge, told them they could not give time to attend to it, and asked them to select seven men, "full of the Holy Ghost and wisdom, whom we may appoint over this business." "Full of the Holy Ghost" did not necessarily mean miraculously endowed, but fully under the influence of the teaching of the divine Spirit. This work that they were to be set over was the seeing these Grecian widows were not neglected, not the whole distribution that took place to the Hebrew widows. This was already attended to. The Hebrews, as distinct from the Grecians, being at home with their wealth, doubtless gave the principal part of the means distributed. Each one of those selected was Greek, as the names show. Now, the apostles did not take the means from these Hebrews and give to foreigners to distribute among the widows and poor of the Hebrews; but they gave to these Greeks means to distribute among their poor widows, not leaving either class dependent upon foreigners for their support.

QUESTIONS ANSWERED,

The point in all this is, the appointment was made only when the necessities of the case demanded it, and was made only to meet the existing need. So a neglected duty in a church would seem to indicate the time and purpose for which men are appointed to duties. This accords with Tit. 1: 5: "For this cause left I thee in Crete, that thou shouldst set in order the things that are wanting [neglected], and ordain [set in proper place] elders in every city." It seems Paul had preached there, according to the accepted chronology, in 63. Titus, I presume, was with him. He was familiar with the proper development and work of a church. Paul left him that he might wait to see their working, guide them into anything they might neglect, and to properly place the elders in the work to which each was fitted. The letter was written in 65. All the references to the elders and deacons indicate that they were to be men of age and experience—not necessarily old men, but men of established character; men not novices, to have their heads turned with the idea of authority; men in whom the passion and fervor of youth had subsided into sobriety, self-control, gravity, earnestness, and firmness; men of experience and success in guiding their families, well grounded and well established in the truth. While no special age is given, they must have sufficient age to have established their characters in these several different relations to have shown aptitude in training families. I do not understand that a failure to have wife and children disqualified for the work; but as most men have wives and children, they were to be such as had guided them well.

We do not understand there were two orders of elders, but all elders have not the same talent. One may do one kind of work; another, a different one. D. L.

ELDERS, THEIR QUALIFICATIONS.

Can a member of a congregation act as an elder except he possesses all of the qualifications that Paul speaks of to Timothy? It appears to my mind that if a man should assume the office of elder without the proper qualifications, as set forth by the apostle in 1 Tim. 3, he would be a self-constituted elder, and that his actions as such would be void. While I am of this opinion, there are many good brethren who differ from me and say that if we have not the proper material we must do the best we can and appoint to the work the best material that we have, whether they possess all of the qualifications or not. (1) The first qualification, it seems to me, is that a man must desire the office; (2) he must be blameless; (3) the husband of one wife; (4) vigilant; (5) sober; (6) of good behavior; (7) given to hospitality; (8) apt to teach; (9) not given to wine; (10) no striker;

BY LIPSCOMB AND SEWELL.

(11) not greedy of filthy lucre; (12) patient; (13) not a brawler; (14) not covetous; (15) one that ruleth his own house well; (16) grave; (17) not a novice; (18) moreover, he must have a good report of them which are without.

Now, the apostle says that a bishop must possess these prerequisites. The question is: Can we place a man in the office, under any circumstances, who does not possess all of these qualifications? Please answer at length, as our congregation has dispensed with the eldership in consequence of not having men who possess all of the requirements.

Do you mean that your congregation has dispensed with the work that elders should do? That nobody instructs the congregation or looks after the weak members? That you have no rule or discipline in the church? Do you mean that nobody leads in the worship? Nobody asks another to give thanks at the table or to lead in prayer? Nobody urges other members to meet to worship God, or to live honestly, uprightly, deal justly and fairly in the world? If you have given up these things, you have given up being Christians.

A people cannot live Christians without doing all the work for one another and the community that God requires. They cannot do this without doing the work of elders and deacons in a community. You cannot live as Christians in a community without looking after the spiritual interests of the church and the public, without helping the poor and the needy, without teaching the ignorant and reproofing the wrongdoers. When this is done, the work of elders is done; and it is much more important that the work of the elders than that the office of elders should be looked after. We often so pervert the religion of Christ that we esteem the office of more importance than the work. This is the world's order of things. It is only in one sense that the word office is applicable to the work in the church. It is not used in the church as it is in the government of the world. In this it means that when a man is inducted into office he is authorized to do certain things that it would be a crime for him to do if he were not in this office. Now, in the Scriptures it has no such meaning. The man's becoming an elder authorizes him to perform no act that he was not authorized to do before. It only makes it his business especially to look after the work now. He is to be chosen because he has shown his fitness for the office by doing the work beforehand. This shows it is not an office in the sense of an office of a civil government. But it is a duty imposed, growing out of a fitness developed for the work needed to be done. Any one who does this work of an elder is, in fact, an elder, whether he is appointed to it or not. The appointment gives him confidence and assurance in the work and makes him feel it especially his duty to do the work.

QUESTIONS ANSWERED,

Sometimes men are elected that have no fitness for the work, and others do it who have a natural fitness for it, but are not elected. A church in this condition has two sets of officers—a man-made set and a God-made set. The man-made ones are always a curse and a hindrance to the church. Better not select any if you will not select the God-made ones. These will do something of the work without appointment from men; and when the work is done, the office is filled.

But our brother says they have none fitted for the work. If so, there are no Christians there. A number cannot live the Christian life and not develop the characters needed to do Christian work. It is frequently said nobody fills this bill, when it is not true. You occasionally find a wicked man who says there is no Christian; and it is just about as hard to find a Christian, according to the faultfinder's standard, as it is to find one fitted for an elder. When the Holy Spirit requires qualifications, he specifies them as they develop themselves and exist among men, not as they exist among angels. The man who expects perfection among men is an impractical visionary. God does not expect it. When he says they must be blameless, he means they are blameless as weak human beings. Abraham was a model of God's men. We form visionary ideas of Abraham's excellence; but when we come to solid facts, he was a weak, erring human. Twice under fear of his life he lied. He occasionally went without God's direction. He and his family suffered for it. I have no doubt we have thousands of Christian men and women who are the equals of Abraham and Sarah in fidelity and trustworthiness before God and man. Peter was not faultless. He prevaricated. I have no doubt our very exacting brethren, had they been in the days of Peter, would have said: "He is not fit to open the doors of the kingdom; he denied the Savior; he is not fit to teach or be a leading apostle." When the Jews came to Antioch, Peter dissembled and refused to eat with the Gentiles, although God had taught him by a miracle that he must receive and treat them as brethren. Yet God accepted him as the leading apostle. God held him blameless as a man, with human weakness and infirmities, when as an angel he would have been blameworthy. It is not blameworthy for a human being to err sometimes. It is for him to persist in the wrong. I have no doubt we have thousands of men, probably some in that very church, who are or may be the equals of Peter in firmness and fidelity to truth. Inspiration gave knowledge, but not moral strength. When we dispense with the elders, we dispense with the work of God; and many Christians are in moral character the equals of Peter or Paul or John or James or Abraham or Isaac or Jacob. This faultfinding and depreciation of everybody else usually arises from undue exaltation of self. It is not a healthy state.

BY LIPSCOMB AND SEWELL.

The old hypocritical sinner who stands off and carps at everybody in the church as wicked means to say he is very righteous and very perfect. He is usually a self-deceived hypocrite. The same spirit in the church belongs to the self-righteous. It is not healthy to be overmuch righteous nor to demand it of others.

Acknowledge your own and your fellow men's humanity, your liability to err; get clear of the foolish idea that men with faults and human weaknesses are unfitted for the service of God. He adapted his service to and for weak men liable to err. Be willing to confess your faults when you do err. I have noticed it in men, I have noticed it in papers. When one starts out to be over sweet-tempered, to keep out all humanity, it becomes one-sided, unfair, and the bitterest and most intolerant of men and papers. They do not show goodness in an honest, open, human, brave way. A paper that starts out to have no controversies, to be overly peaceable, is as sure to be filled with unjust insinuations and innuendoes as that to-morrow's sun will rise. You cannot crush the humanity out of men. Do not look for perfection in human beings nor dispense with the work of God while pretending to be Christians. When you do the work, you fill all the offices of his servants.

ELDERS, THEIR APPOINTMENT.

Brother Sewell: I beg your pardon. I did not think it was wrong to ask you how you appointed elders in the churches; but when you say it does not matter how you do things, I beg leave to differ with you there. I think it does. Knowing you had been a Bible student all your life, and a teacher of it as long as almost any man I could think of, I did not expect to get anything but a Bible answer; but when you say what was done away and what was not when the revelation was completed, and that before that time the apostles were made in one day into the grandest preachers the world ever saw, and that Adam was made a full-grown man by miraculous power, I do not know what to think. I had thought without the seed there was not anything made that was made; that Adam was not made a grown man any more than Jesus was; that there never was an oak before there was an acorn; that man must have seed in him before he can become a newborn babe, or a Christian; and that an elder must have the qualifications Paul says he must have, or you cannot make an elder of him by appointment. However, we are agreed on that point. You admit that in some cases it might be best to go by Paul's directions. If in some, why not in all? You say: "I have found that when a new congregation begins to meet and worship, there are some better fitted than others to take the lead in the work and worship of the congregation." Then why not appoint them and keep out the kind of men you speak of? If we have the right kind of elders, they will not let them push themselves forward. It is my belief that these are the kind of men of whom Paul said that their "mouths must be stopped," and he knew that was the only way to do it. Now, I want to ask you one more question, and if you will answer this, I never will ask or write anything more on this subject. The question is this: Where does the Bible say anything should ever be done away that was ever commanded to be done or not to be done in the churches?

QUESTIONS ANSWERED,

The trouble with Brother Holt in this whole matter plainly is that appointment to a work in the New Testament involves a divinely prescribed ceremony or formula; and this whole idea of a formula of appointment has arisen from the idea of office and official authority in the church. Our brother is certainly under the influence of these notions to some extent, or he would not be so earnestly contending for a specific form of appointment. His question above shows that he thinks the appointment of the seven and others was by a specific form commanded of God, given in the New Testament, and that it must not be dropped out of use. If this be true, Brother Holt is right; but the trouble is, he assumes the thing to be proved. That is just the thing I have been calling in question all the time, and the very thing which neither he nor any other brother has proved. The assumption in the matter is that fasting, prayer, and the laying on of hands, as mentioned in the New Testament, constitute the formula of appointment or ordination. If we grant the assumption, then the conclusion very easily follows that these things must be done in order to an appointment; but the trouble is that no one has yet made the proof. The word appoint is the word especially to be examined, because the word ordained, as connected with workers in the church, has been entirely left out of the Revised Version of the New Testament. The word appoint, as found in the New Testament, is a translation of at least ten different Greek words, no two of which have precisely the same meaning; while in the Old Testament the word appoint is from about twenty different Hebrew words, all with a little different shades of meaning, but all of which were thought in some sense to involve the meaning of the word appoint. It may certainly be seen from these facts that the word appoint cannot mean a specific formula or ceremony.

I will here give a few examples of the use of the word, both in the Old Testament and the New Testament. Solomon said to Hiram, in regard to hewing cedar trees for the temple: "And unto thee will I give hire for thy servants according to all that thou shalt appoint." (1 Kings 5: 6.) Instead of the word appoint in this passage the Revised Version has the word say. In 1 Kings 11: 18 it is said of Pharaoh: "Which gave him a house, and appointed him victuals, and gave him land." In Dan. 1: 5 we have the expression: "And the king appointed them a daily provision of the king's meat, and of the wine which he drank." These may suffice from the Old Testament to show that the word appoint involves no specific formula, but simply what certain men said or directed to be done. In the New Testament we have: "After these things the Lord appointed other seventy also, and sent them two and two before his face into every city and place, whither he himself would come." (Luke 10: 1.) When the apostles were about to appoint another apostle in the place of Judas, "they prayed, and said, Thou, Lord, which knowest the hearts of all men, show whether of these two thou hast chosen." The word show is from the same Greek word that appoint is from in Luke 10: 1. The Greek word is anadeiknumi, and means "to show anything by raising it aloft, as a torch; to display, manifest, show plainly or openly; to mark out, constitute, appoint by some outward sign; and in this case the choice was shown by lot. When the Savior sent out the seventy, he showed or indicated to them by word whom he wanted to go before him—likely called them by name and told them to go—and that is all the word indicates. It involves no sort of fixed ceremony, but a simple designation as to who should go, and they went. Again: "Our fathers had the tabernacle of witness in the wilderness, as he had appointed, speaking unto Moses, that he should make it according to the fashion that he had seen." (Acts 7: 44.) God appointed the tabernacle by telling Moses to make it, how to make it, and how they should use it; but it was by no fixed formula that God appointed the tabernacle, but simply by speaking and telling Moses what to do regarding it. The Greek word here for appoint is diatasso, and is defined: "To arrange, make a precise arrangement, to prescribe, to direct, to charge, to command, to ordain." This word occurs sixteen times in the Greek Testament, but it is rendered appoint only four times. It is rendered command seven times; ordain three times, in the sense of direct or command; and once set in order; and there is not a single instance of the use of this word that admits of a fixed ceremony. One of the occurrences of this word is: "And we went before to ship, and sailed unto Assos, there intending to take in Paul: for so had he appointed, minding himself to go afoot." (Acts 20: 13.) When Paul appointed that they should take him in at a certain place, it only means he directed or told them what to do. In Acts 28: 23 we have this: "And when they had appointed him a day, there came many to him into his lodging; to whom he expounded and testified the kingdom of God." This is where they appointed—that is, named, specified—a day for Paul to preach at Rome. This, of course, required nothing more than for them to name or designate a day for him. In Acts 6 the word rendered appoint means "to place, set, constitute, appoint; to conduct; to make, render, or cause to be." So the word means set, place, appoint to do this work—simply that they assigned the seven men to do the work of serving tables. There arose a necessity for that work to be done, and these men were selected as required and directed to do that work. The prayer and laying on of hands are not involved in the word appoint, and were, therefore, for a different purpose. Prayer and fasting are individual acts of devotion to God, and to reduce them to a fixed formula or ceremony is to pervert them and take all the life and meaning out of them. Laying on of hands was always by men miraculously endowed and for miraculous ends, and never an ordinance of the church to be continued after the age of miracles. The word appoint, therefore, means to command, to direct, assign, or set, or place a man over, or to do a certain work, as in the case of the seven; but the form of so placing or directing men to do certain work is not laid down, just as the matter of going to the place of assembling on the first day of the week. We are required to go, but not told how we must go; hence we may walk, go on horseback, in a buggy, on the cars, on a wheel, or any way we may choose; but if Brother Holt were to undertake to force all to walk, or go on horseback, or in a cart, he would find trouble. So in regard to the matter of appointment. The apostles appointed the seven, and Titus was directed to appoint elders in every city; but no formula of appointment is laid down. To direct, request, assign, place, or set one to do the work needed fills the bill. Just as well may you require that every one shall walk to the place of meeting on the first day of the week as to require a fixed or specific formula of appointment of workers in the church; and since God has not specified how we shall go to meeting, it would be preposterous and presumptuous to require all to go one particular way. It would be exalting human requirements into the place of divine commands.

QUESTIONS ANSWERED,

Washing the hands is a good and harmless way to keep clean, and about the only successful way to get rid of dirt and filth, and it has always been right, therefore, to wash the hands; but when the Pharisees began to require the Jews to wash their hands at certain specified times and occasions as a religious service, then they made void the commands of God by their traditions. I think brethren do precisely this very thing when they require or practice any specified formula of appointment in the church. When men fast and pray and lay on hands as the formula of appointment, they act upon the same principle they would if they were to lay down the law that all the members should walk to the place of meeting on Lord's day. Hence, where the Lord has not laid down the manner of doing a thing, we have no right to lay down any specified form. It is wrong, a matter of rebellion against God, to do so. I would about as soon enter into a demand that all the members of the church should go to meeting one fixed way as to require that the workers in the church should be appointed by fasting, prayer, and laying on of hands.

Now, as no fixed form of appointment has been commanded or laid down in the New Testament, there is no such thing as laying it aside; therefore the principles of the above question do not apply in this matter at all. This is the reason why it is not a matter of importance as to how I do these things. It is true that I have been studying the Bible a long time—about half a century; but in all that time I have not been able to find any formula laid down for appointing men to do work in the church of God, and no one else has been able to show it to me. Any way that a congregation may give an elder to understand they want him to act as overseer for them is an appointment sufficient. It is the duty of every child of God to read the Scriptures regularly, learn all he can about the work of the church, and do all that he can do, anyhow, and thus grow up into the work; and if a man grows until he can fill the bill as an overseer, and then fails to go on in the work, the congregation should certainly urge upon him to persevere in doing his duty. This would be appointment enough.

As to prayer and fasting, these may be voluntarily done at any time and by any Christian who may in a very humble and earnest way implore God's favor. Hands cannot now be laid on by divine authority, as we understand the New Testament. Work, service, earnest devotion to God, is what we need, and no sort of appointing or ordaining service can take its place.

DATE DUE

NOV 16 '92	NOV 11 '97
MAR 22 '93	4/19/00
APR 05 '93
DEC 14 '94	APR 10 2006
APR 26 '95
SEP 95
OCT 25 '95
NOV 22 '95
JUN 16 '98
NOV 18 '99
DEC 10 '99
UN 30 2009

CINCINNATI BIBLE COLLEGE & SEM. LIBRARY

3 4320 00112 7564

262 H415c

Ac. #12464

Hayden, Warren Luce.

Church polity

GEORGE MARK ELLIOTT LIBRARY
The Cincinnati Bible Seminary

262 H415c

Ac. #12464

Hayden, Warren Luce.

Church polity

SEP 1

